

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
AT LOS ANGELES

THE GIFT OF
MAY TREAT MORRISON
IN MEMORY OF ALEXANDER F MORRISON

add. ad.
D A 334
712 8 H :?

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2008 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

SIR THOMAS MORE

Thos: Morr Esq: Cancellour.

SIR THOMAS MORR

SIR THOMAS MORE

BY

WILLIAM HOLDEN HUTTON, B.D.

FELLOW, TUTOR, AND PRECENTOR OF S. JOHN BAPTIST COLLEGE, OXFORD ; EXAMINING CHAPLAIN TO THE LORD BISHOP OF ELY

Ars utinam mores animumque effingere possit:
Pulchrior in terris nulla tabella foret.—MARTIAL.

SECOND EDITION

METHUEN & CO.
36 ESSEX STREET W.C
LONDON
1900

TO VINA
AMONIACO

AMONIACO VINA
EDDHA 20 ITA
VOL. 41

384
MS. H. 9
1900

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION

IT is now twelve years since I began to study the life and writings of the great hero of conscience whom this book commemorates. The work has been often laid aside, but never wholly abandoned, and in spite of the demands of a laborious profession I have been able, I think, to become acquainted with most of the literature which describes and illustrates More's beautiful life.

With the exception of Mr. S. L. Lee's admirable, and, for its length, exhaustive, contribution to the Dictionary of National Biography, which cannot be obtained in a separate form, and Father Bridgett's valuable biography, which is concerned primarily with the life of More as a defender of the Papal Supremacy, there are no modern works which have made use of all the material that is at the disposal of students of this period.

Much interest attaches to the earlier biographies from the circumstances connected with their composition and publication.

When England, under Mary, had returned to the Roman obedience, William Roper wrote the life of his father-in-law ; Rastell, his nephew, published the great folio of his English Works ; his friend, Ellis Heywood, composed his Italian memorial Il Moro, and Nicholas Harpsfield the biography which is still in manuscript in the Library of the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth. In 1555 and 1556 the Latin works were published at Louvain with introductory verses and eulogies.

When Roman projects were most rife under Elizabeth additions were made to the literature of the subject. Stapleton published his Tres Thomae when the Armada was about to sail ; and an anonymous life, also in the Lambeth Library, was written in 1599.

After the marriage of Charles I., Roper's biography was published abroad, and Cresacre More's in England. Hoddesdon's compilation appeared in 1662, when secret negotiations were being carried on between the Papacy and the Monarchy of the Restoration ; and Stapleton's life was reprinted under James II.

Roper wrote almost entirely from personal knowledge and from memory. Thus, his work, in spite of its deep interest, is occasionally inaccurate. Stapleton added to the statements of Roper much that he had himself heard from members of More's household, and also collated many of his letters. The anonymous life published by Dr. Wordsworth<sup>1</sup> is apparently based on those of Roper and Harpsfield. It has been attributed to More's nephew, Rastell ; and a chance reference in Lord Herbert of Cherbury's

<sup>1</sup> Ecclesiastical Biography, vol. ii.

History of Henry VIII.<sup>1</sup> may afford a slight confirmation of the supposition. Cresacre More, the great-grandson of Sir Thomas, had undoubtedly some original information, but his work is mainly founded on those of Roper and Stapleton, and its chief interest lies in the spirit in which it is written. Its authorship was for a long time attributed to his brother Thomas More, a Jesuit; but the mistake was corrected by Mr. Hunter in the edition of 1828.

Among later English biographies the most notable are those by Arthur Cayley (London, 1808), Sir James Mackintosh (1807, republished 1844), and Mr. Walter, a Roman Catholic writer (London, 1839), with Mr. Seebohm's interesting study, The Oxford Reformers. Among German lives may be mentioned those of Rudhart (1829) and Baumstark (1879), works of very different character and value.

Some years ago Mr. Cotter Morison undertook to write a life for the series called English Worthies, but Mr. Andrew Lang has been kind enough to inform me that he made no progress in the work.

In 1891, following on the Beatification of Sir Thomas More by Leo XIII. in 1886, Father Bridgett published his interesting book.

Those who know the literature of the subject will admit, I think, that there is still room for another biography.

My aim has been to lay most stress on the personal interest of the subject. To this object the introduction of the history of the times, and the discussion of critical questions of theology and history, have been subordinated. I have endeavoured not to write as the partisan of any school or opinion, but as a student of the past. I certainly do not claim to be unbiassed ; and I must admit that towards such a character as More's I find it very difficult even to fancy myself critical. But I have tried to tell my story simply, briefly, and truthfully, with no extenuation or apology.

<sup>1</sup> Edit. 1682, p. 286.

That it is impossible to speak rightly of a past age without allowing it to speak for itself is often more true in biography than in history. No apology is therefore needed for the frequent use of the actual words of the early biographers of More, especially of his son and his great-grandson, in whose very language there seems to linger a spirit which modern English could with difficulty preserve. I cannot forbear to add that I have used the copy of More's English Works which belonged to William Roper himself, and which by the bequest of Nathaniel Crynes in 1745 came into the possession of the College of which I have the honour to be Librarian.

My references in the early lives are almost invariably to the original authority for the particular statement. Thus, for instance, Cresacre More is not mentioned in the notes when he merely repeats Roper or Stapleton.

Of the mass of English and foreign contemporary books and documents illustrating the life of More it is unnecessary to speak. The references I have given in the notes do not claim to be exhaustive. Erasmus is the most delightful of guides ; but the late Mr. Froude's "abbreviated substitute" for his writings, charming though it is, is far too untrustworthy to be regarded as a serious authority by any one who has studied the letters and treatises for himself.

Every student of English History is under almost immeasurable obligation to the labours of the late Mr. Brewer, of Mr. James Gairdner, whose authority on the period is beyond appeal, and of D. Pascual de Gayangos, through whom the Domestic and Spanish Papers of the reign of Henry VIII. have been rendered accessible to the public.

Lastly, I have to thank the Editors and Publishers of the English Historical Review and the Guardian for permission to reprint matter which I have contributed to their columns.

W. H. HUTTON.

The Great House, Burford.
S. Alphege, 1895.

PREFACE TO SECOND EDITION

IN preparing a new edition I have endeavoured to correct misprints and amend mis-statements. I desire to express my thanks to those, unknown to me as well as friends, who have helped me with kind suggestions. I have adopted Father Bridgett's kind corrections on two points.

To the kindness of Miss Florence Freeman I owe the knowledge of the Vita di Tomaso Moro, by Domenico Regi, published in 1675, a further instance of the widespread interest in the beautiful life of the English saint.

Since the publication of my book, Dr. Lupton's edition of the Utopia, certainly a classic and final one, has been issued by the Clarendon Press. The Quarterly Review for October 1896 contained an exceedingly interesting article on More, by a very able writer. The revived interest has also been shown in the presentation of a bust to the Chelsea Public Library, and by the generous gift of a memorial window in the church of S. Lawrence Jewry by Mr. H. C. Richards, Q.C., M.P.

Burford
S. John Evangelist, 1899

CONTENTS

CHAP.		PAGE
I.	EARLY LIFE: INFLUENCES OF RELIGION AND THE RENAISSANCE	...	...	...	1
II.	HOME AND FRIENDS	...	...	...	40
III.	LITERARY WORK: THE 'UTOPIA'	...	...	...	96
IV.	POLITICAL LIFE	...	...	...	143
V.	RELIGIOUS LIFE AND WORKS	...	...	...	184
VI.	TROUBLES, IMPRISONMENT, AND DEATH	...	...	...	229
	INDEX	...	...	...	285

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

AFTER DRAWINGS BY HOLBEIN

						PAGE
SIR THOMAS MORE ...	...	...	...	...	...	Frontispiece
SIR JOHN MORE	...	...	...	...	...	17
JOHN MORE ...	...	...	...	...	...	55
ELIZABETH DAUNCEY	...	...	...	...	...	86
ERASMUS	...	...	...	...	...	141
MARGARET GIGGS	...	...	...	...	...	271

SIR THOMAS MORE

---

CHAPTER I.

EARLY LIFE: INFLUENCES OF RELIGION AND THE RENAISSANCE.

“Es bildet ein Talent sich in der Stille, Sich ein Charakter in dem Strom der Welt.”—GÖTHE.

ENGLAND at the end of the fifteenth century was beginning to pass out from the medieval world towards that expanded horizon which stretched ever further as she advanced. The world it seemed was being recreated as the years drew on. The age of English discovery had begun. Piloted by Italians and with as yet no certain knowledge of how widely they were extending the boundaries of European enterprise, and still outstripped by the great feats of the Portuguese and of Columbus, Englishmen had heard of the new world in the Northern Ocean with its riches and its strange peoples. But as yet they looked within rather than without. An Englishman who had been to Italy was more thought of than one who had seen the New found land. Poliziano and Pico della Mirandola were, for years to come, more famous names than Cabot and Vespuce. England's keenest interest lay in learning, in literature, and in art. Foreign painters were finding in England welcome and reward. Foreign scholars were received with enthusiasm which almost reached adoration. And in England every production of the continental Press, Italian, German, French, was awaited with eagerness, and read with avidity. Small though the literary public may have been, it was extremely important. England entered into the literary comity of nations; and her students wherever they wandered in their scholar-pilgrimage still found themselves at home. Whatever were the dark stains on the picture, Europe still stood outwardly undivided. Churchmen were not all ignorant, nor Popes luxurious and worldly. Satire might fix its sharpest darts in the hearts of Monasticism, and indignant reformers might repeat the strange stories that men told of Papal avarice and lust. But society was not yet separated into bitterly hostile sections, Art was not yet corrupt, and the gorgeous pride with which Religion was surrounded still left it power to inform the mind and purify the heart.

In a country of great churches, of rich merchandise and pomp, great ideas were in the air. The men who read and pondered were coming out into the world, and the world was ready to listen to them. And great ideas were represented in great men. Between 1485 and 1535 England had two great cardinals and two greater kings. Fascinating personalities too gave expression to the marvellous richness of the national life. Pico was striving to reconcile the purity of the Christian belief with the beautiful paganism of Greece; Amerigo Vespucci was sailing "to see and know the far countries of the world"; Wolsey was giving England a firm administration and a skilful diplomacy; Erasmus was pleading as a scholar for the liberty of reason while he clung to the faith of the Catholic Church. Of all these and their work More knew well, and with all he sympathized; and so it came about that no one represents more highly or more nobly the greatness and the attraction of the age in which he lived.

The life of More falls within the years in which Europe was passing through a great transition, and England through a great awakening. In his days, as in his person, the Renaissance and the Reformation seemed to meet on British soil. No Englishman was ever more profoundly influenced by the feeling of his age. The delight with which Italian scholars had pored over the precious manuscripts of the classics, and found in them a new completeness in Humanity and a new excellence in Art—the zeal with which German printers had multiplied the opportunities of knowledge and enriched them with every device which labour and ingenuity could suggest—the enthusiasm with which eager priests of every nationality had welcomed the new light that was beginning to shine upon the sacred heritage of the Christian world—appealed to him with an invitation to which he eagerly responded. Not less was he touched by the claims of music, of painting, of the instinct for discovery and distant quest which was coming to be as the breath of life to the Englishman of the next age. And with all this his life was passed in the period of the profoundest religious, political, and social change that our nation has witnessed. He first saw the light in an age of civil conflict : he died when religious strife was at its fiercest. The year of his birth saw the murder of Clarence ; the year of his death found the English King deposed and excommunicated by the Pope. As a boy he heard tell of the last intrigues and the last battles of the War of the Roses —as a man he took part in the measures by which England under Wolsey and Henry VIII. was assuming a position in Europe which the proudest of her ancient kings might have envied. It was a period of profound disturbance. Without were fightings, within were fears. But it was above all a time of vigorous and exultant vitality. And in all the varied manifestations of national life, the literary and artistic interests, and the political and religious struggles, no man played a more prominent part than the man who among all changes kept untarnished honour till the end.

Thomas More was born in Milk Street, Cheapside, in the ward of Cripplegate Within, on February 7, 1478.<sup>1</sup> His father was John More, afterwards to become Knight and a Justice of the King's Bench. His mother's name is less easily ascertained. "Matris nomen nescitur, quippe quae adhuc infante Thomas Moro mortua est," says one of his earliest biographers. His great-grandson, Cresacre More, states that her name was "Handcombe, of Holiewell in the countie of Bedford," but the discovery of Mr. Aldis Wright—a contemporary family register—has generally been accepted as proof that she was really Agnes, daughter of Thomas Granger.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See on this point, the appendix to Mr. Seeböhm's Oxford Reformers (2nd edition), where the question is finally settled ; and Notes and Queries, 4th Series, ii. 365.

He was of gentle, not noble, blood: "familiâ non celebri sed honestâ natus," says the epitaph he wrote for himself. Little else is known, for the family papers were seized by Henry VIII. and have not been discovered. Cresacre More is anxious to show that "Judge More bare arms from his birth, having his coat quartered, which doth argue that he came to his inheritance by descent"; yet he can say no more of his family than, "as I heard, they either came out of the Mores of Ireland, or they of Ireland came out of us." Mr. Foss, however, has entered into a lengthy examination, the result of which has satisfied him that Sir Thomas More's grandfather was a certain John More, first butler, afterwards steward, and finally reader, of Lincoln's Inn.<sup>2</sup> It seems clear too that the Mores held property in Hertfordshire for several generations. Thomas More had one brother, John, who was his clerk in later days. Of his two sisters, Joan married a certain Richard Stafferton, and Elizabeth became the wife of John Rastell, the poet, and second printer of note in England.

The vision of his mother on her wedding night, recorded by the biographer, differs little from those

<sup>1</sup> See note, p. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Judges of England, vol. v. pp. 190—203.

told of many mothers of famous men in early times. While he was still an infant he had a narrow escape of being drowned, which is noted with much earnestness by Dr. Stapleton, whose Tres Thomae was the earliest printed life, and who delighted to find resemblances in the minutest details between More and S. Thomas of Canterbury. "This escape," says his grandson, "was no doubt a happy presage of his future holiness, and put his parents in mind that he was that shining child, of whom his mother had that former vision; wherefore his father had the greater care to bring him up in learning." He himself tells an anecdote of his childhood which may serve to remind us of the exciting events among which it was passed. When all London was talking of King Edward's death, he heard his father told how, on the very night of the decease, a neighbour had said, "By my troth, man, then will my master, the Duke of Gloucester, be king." Thomas More was then little over five years old;<sup>1</sup> but he never forgot the terror that that grim name evoked.

Before long he was placed under a school-master of fame, one Nicholas Holt, at S. Anthony's in Threadneedle Street. This school, one of the grammar schools founded by Henry VI., had at the time a great reputation, and its master had already taught William Latimer and John Colet, the future Dean.

<sup>1</sup> Latin Works, p. 46. That he heard the story told to his father is in the Latin, but not in the English version of the History of Richard III.; cf. English Works, p. 38. Cf. Letters etc. of Richard III. and Henry VII., vol. ii., Preface (by Mr. James Gairdner), p. xxi.

The school maintained its fame down to the days of Stowe, who tells us that in the disputation of the London schools in the churchyard of S. Bartholomew, Smithfield, the boys of S. Anthony's usually carried away the prize. After Thomas More had there "been brought up in the Latin tongue, he was by his father's procurement received into the house of the right reverend, wise, and learned prelate, Cardinal Morton,"<sup>1</sup> probably about 1489.

Morton, then Archbishop and Lord Chancellor, but not to receive the red hat till 1493, was at that time probably the most important man in England; and it may be reasonably inferred from young More's reception into so distinguished a household that his father had then reached a position of some dignity, though he had not yet become a serjeant-at-law. No choice could have been wiser. Morton was a man of learning as well as a sagacious statesman; and the discretion which was his most characteristic quality may well have impressed itself on More. His rise had been due to Cardinal Bourchier, by whom he was originally introduced at Court, and whom he ultimately succeeded in the archiepiscopate, and he was as fortunate in the enmity of Richard III. as he had been in the favour of Edward IV. In his History of Richard III., More says that he "was a man of great natural wit, very well learned, honourable in behaviour, lacking in no wise to win favour;"<sup>2</sup> a character which is improved and amplified in the Utopia, in a passage so significant of More's position and advantages in his house that it may well be quoted here. "He was of mean stature, and though stricken in age yet bare he his body upright. In his face, did shine such an amiable reverence as was pleasant to behold; gentle in communication, yet earnest and sage. He had great delight many times with rough speech to his suitors to prove, but without harm, what prompt wit and what bold spirit were in every man. In the which, as in a virtue much agreeing with his nature, so that therewith were not joined impudency, he took great delectation. And the same person as apt and meet to have an administration in the weal public he did lovingly embrace. In his speech he was fine, eloquent, and pithy. In the law he had profound knowledge, in wit he was incomparable, and in memory excellent. These qualities which in him were by nature singular, he by learning and use had made perfect."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Roper, Life of More (edit. Lumby : Cambridge, 1880), p. 6.

<sup>2</sup> English Works, p. 70.

This is the description which his young protégé gives of the great counsellor of Henry VII.—"The King," he makes Master Hythlodaye add, "put much trust in his counsel, and the commonwealth also in a manner leaned unto him when I was there." The whole passage—an imaginary conversation at the Chancellor's house, in which Hythlodaye takes the chief part—may not improbably be a recollection, rather than an invention, of More's, for the social questions of the day undoubtedly received much attention from Morton. He is now remembered chiefly by "Morton's Fork," and the Union of the Roses; and the active good that he did is forgotten. Yet he has left more permanent memorials. Not only did he repair at his own cost the official residence of his See, and carry out various works at Oxford, of which the completion of the Divinity School is the most famous, but he cut the drain from Peterborough to Wisbeach still known as "Morton's Leam," and is credited with the erection of the Tower of Wisbeach and the rebuilding of Rochester Bridge. He was in fact a man from whom More would obtain the training of a philanthropist as well as of a courtier. It is probable also that the very definite views on the position of the English Church for which More afterwards laid down his life had their origin in the archbishop's tuition. Morton was one of the archbishops who followed the example of Chichele and Beaufort, under whom men were taught to forget the claim of the English primate to be alterius orbis papa. The very words used by Sir Thomas More on his trial seem an echo of the policy of Morton, a complete abnegation of the ancient national tradition.

<sup>1</sup> Ralph Robinson's Translation, Arber's edit. p. 36.

Whatever influence his surroundings may have exercised upon him, More seems—child though he was—to have been no unimportant person in the household of the Chancellor. "Though he was young of years," says Roper in a well-known passage,<sup>1</sup> "yet would he at Christmas-tide suddenly step in among the players, and, never studying for the matter, make a part of his own there presently before them, which made the lookers-on more sport than all the players beside. In whose wit and learning the Cardinal much delighting would often say of him unto the nobles that divers times dined with him, 'This child here waiting at the table, whosoever shall live to see it, will prove a marvellous man.'"<sup>1</sup> A happy life it was in the old world state of the medieval prelates. Art flourished in all its richness under the shelter of the Church. The sharp division of classes which the Reformation was to accentuate was hardly felt as yet, and the New Learning from Italy was beginning to brighten the lives of priest and noble alike. Perhaps it was of this time that Erasmus writes— "Adolescens comœdiolas et scripsit et egit."<sup>1</sup> His life at any rate was a very happy one, and he looked back to the archbishop in later years with the reverence and gratitude that belong naturally to the first who loves and fosters the bright hopes of boyhood. "I assure you, Master Raphael," he makes himself to say in the Utopia, "I took great delectation in hearing you . . . and methought myself to be in the mean time not only at home in mine own country, but also through the pleasant remembrance of the Cardinal, in whose house I was brought up of a child, to wax a child again. And, friend Raphael, though I did bear very great love towards you before, yet, seeing you do so earnestly favour this man, you will not believe how much my love towards you is now increased."

<sup>1</sup> Page 6.

How long More remained in the Chancellor's household is uncertain, but the year of his removal to Oxford is now believed to be 1492. That he was sent to the University—no necessary introduction to the profession of the Law, for which his father designed him—was due to the care of his patron, who, says his grandson, “saw that he could not profit so much in his own house as he desired, where there were many distractions of public affairs.”<sup>1</sup> Thus, at fourteen, he was introduced to the great centre of culture in England, where already the material prosperity of the time was providing new endowments for scholars, and whence students were crossing to Italy to study Greek at what seemed to be the fountain of all learning. At Morton’s table, no doubt, he would have heard talk of the subjects which enchainèd men’s minds in Italy and had begun to touch the colder hearts of Englishmen; but the learning of the ecclesiastics and lawyers of More’s childhood belonged to an age that was rapidly passing away, and even in the archbishop’s house he could have had little hint of the fulness of that new light to the dawnings of which he was introduced at Oxford. His juvenile performances show the development of his mind very clearly. The string of verses, hardly to be called a poem, entitled “A merry jest how a sergaunt would learne to playe the frere,” in default of any evidence of date, would seem to belong to an earlier period than that to which Sir James Mackintosh assigned it. Its merit hardly deserves the eulogies passed upon it by that author.<sup>2</sup> It is no doubt true that English poetry was then at a low ebb, but the fact is hardly to be accepted as proof of genius in all who essayed to write verses. The whole jingle, which fills four pages of the collected edition of More's English Works, gives indications of juvenility in the writer as well as of the decadence of English verse, and shows no trace of the higher culture by which More was marked after his Oxford studies had begun. To the view that these lines were written when More was quite a boy some support is also given by the fact that they are printed at the beginning of the collection above-mentioned, in which chronological order is clearly attempted.

<sup>1</sup> Epp. x. 30.

<sup>1</sup> Cresacre More, p. 9.

<sup>2</sup> Life of More, pp. 15—17.

An advance is to be traced in the lines which he wrote, probably in some Oxford vacation, under the nine allegorical representations of the ages of man devised by him for his father's house in London. In these a certain elegance of force appears: he was learning at the University that sense of form and style which he never lost. On the first pageant, for instance, was depicted on the "goodly hanging of fine painted cloth" a boy whipping a top, with these lines appended—

"I am called Chyldhod, in play is all my mind,
To cast a coylte, a cokstele, and a ball.
A toppe can I set and drive it in his kynde,
But wold to God these hatefull bookees all
Were in a fyre brent to pouder small.
Then myght I lede my lyfe always in play :
Which life God send me to myne endyng daye."<sup>1</sup>

In the second pageant was shown a "goodly freshe

<sup>1</sup> English Works, edit. 1537; and cf. Warton, History of English Poetry (1st edit.), vol. iii. p. 101.

yonge man," riding, with a hawk on his wrist, followed by a brace of greyhounds. On this the verses were—

“ Manhod I am. Therefore I me delyght
 To hunt and hawk, to nourish up and fede
 The grayhounde to the course, the hawke to the flyght,
 And to bestride a good and lusty stede.
 These thynges become a very man indede
 Yet thinketh this boy his pevishe game swetter,
 But what no force, his reason is no better.”

The third represented the triumph of Cupid, who stood upon the prostrate body of the “freshe yonge man,” with Venus at his side—

“ Who so ne knoweth the strength and power and myght
 Of Venus and me her lytle sonne Cupyde
 Thou Manhod shalt a mirroure bene a ryght
 By us subdued for all thy great pryde
 My fyry dart perceeth thy tender syde.
 Now thou which erst despiseth children small Shall waxe a chylde again and be wythall.”

For the fourth there was Old Age—

“ Old Age am I, with lokkes thynne and hore,
 Of our short lyfe the last and best part.
 Wyse and discrete: the publike wele therefore
 I help to rule to my labour and smart.
 Therefore, Cupyde, withdraw thy fyry dart.
 Chargeable matters shall of love oppresse
 The chyldish game and ydle business.”<sup>1</sup>

For the others, Death, Fame, Time, Eternity, and the Poet (whose verses are, significantly, in Latin), the treatment is entirely conventional, and the expression much weaker.

Upon these, again, a further advance, with the distinct influence of Italian models, is to be seen in the Rufull Lamentation of 1503; while the English style comes out with ease and freshness in the prose of the life of Pico della Mirandola, in 1504. We can trace in the beginnings of his literary work the influence of the Oxford of his day. But, to return. More was entered at Canterbury College, one of the foundations which afterwards made way for Christ Church, and seems to have occupied a room also in S. Mary Hall.<sup>1</sup> There he remained for two years. Of the state of learning in Oxford at that time very different opinions have been expressed. Many, relying on the strong condemnation of Erasmus and More, and forgetting that such language has been used by the more advanced scholars of all ages, would consider that no interest in literature or culture was apparent. This is, surely, a mistake. Though the Universities of England had not the support which was afforded in Italy by the circles of distinguished patrons of learning, the great leaders of the English Renaissance and Reformation, as well as their opponents, had received an academical training. It was already fashionable to patronize learning. Henry VII. was not forgetful of his cultured mother, and Prince Arthur was a constant visitor at Oxford. More significant still, the University had chosen Morton as its Chancellor. When More began to study in Oxford the attempt to transplant Italian culture was being made with energy and success. Grocyn, who had visited Italy in 1488, was teaching Greek to an eager and increasing audience. Linacre, a younger man, who had also breathed the delicate atmosphere of the Florentine Academy, and studied under Chalcondylas and Poliziano, was More's especial instructor.<sup>1</sup> While these men lectured on the classic literatures, and the hearers began to perceive the dimensions of that vast world of literature and art which it seemed to be within their power to revivify and reconstruct, not only boys like More, but men already working in the world, professed ecclesiastics and parish priests like Colet, gave up active life to enter on the new course of study. For them, as for those who were carrying the English name across the far seas, a new world seemed to be open. Then it was that Colet (the phrase is Mr. Seebohm's) "fell in love with" More. The expression is hardly too strong. He was now only fourteen, but there seems always to have been all through his life a fascination about More which no cultured man could resist. It was the union of simplicity of manner and purity of soul with a swift appreciation of the thoughts, and a true sympathy for the sorrows of others,—of a keen intellect and deep earnestness of purpose, softened by a bright and continual humour. More might well be the "soul" of Colet, as Tommaso Cavalieri was a few years later of the great Florentine sculptor. Colet was then twenty-six. He had already taken the degree of Master of Arts, and was now studying Greek with an intensity which soon induced him, not satisfied with what Grocyn and Linacre could teach, to travel to France and Italy in pursuit of wider culture. The friendship thus begun was to last as long as Colet's life. The stern but saintly priest never forgot his young Oxford friend. Of his love and prayers he may well have thought when in old age he bade the children of "Paul's" lift up their little white hands for him. We have little information of the actual course of More's studies at Oxford beyond the bare statement of his letter to Dorpius already referred to. His life could not have been an easy one. The accounts we hear of the hardships of students in Edward VI.'s reign would probably be as true of forty years earlier. Many rose between four and five, and after prayer in the College chapel, studied till ten, when they dined on very meagre fare—"content with a penny piece of beef between four, having a pottage made of the same beef with salt and oatmeal, and nothing else. After their dinner," continues the description, "they are reading or learning till five in the evening, when they have a supper not better than their dinner, immediately after which they go to reasoning in problems or to some other study till nine or ten; and then being without fire are fain to walk or run up and down for half-an-hour to get a heat in the feet, when they go to bed."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> English Works, pp. 3, 4.

<sup>1</sup> Vide Ant. Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (1st edit.), p. 32, quoting Miles Windsor: cf. Cres. More, p. 9, and Hoddesdon, p. 3; also Hearne's edition of Roper.

<sup>1</sup> See his Epistle to Dorphus: and Stapleton, de Thibus Thomis (More), cap. 1.

The path of study was not made smooth to More, for in spite, or perhaps in consequence, of his diligence, "in his allowance his father kept him very short, suffering him scarcely to have so much money in his own custody as would pay for the mending of his apparel," and demanding a strict account of his expenses. This treatment, says his grandson, he would often speak of and praise when he came to riper years, "affirming that by this means he was curbed from all vice and withdrawn from many idle expenses, either of gaming or keeping naughty company, so that he knew neither play nor other riot, wherein most young men in these our lamentable days plunge themselves too timely, to the utter overthrow as well of learning and future virtue as of their temporal estates."<sup>1</sup> Though the assiduity with which More pursued his studies must have satisfied his father, their direction was not so pleasing, for the worthy Judge believed that Greek literature was not likely to be of use to a lawyer.<sup>2</sup> Little practical advantage indeed was to be gained at Oxford by one destined for the Bar. The Medieval Universities of the North were as a rule unfavourable to the study of Jurisprudence and of Medicine. At Oxford a degree in Law could not be obtained without seven years' study after the completion of the Arts' course, and this might well seem a waste of time to the keen lawyer whose shrewd face we know so well from Holbein's masterly drawing. Harpsfield, who adds a few touches to Roper's record of these early years, says that in the short time young More stayed at Oxford—"being not fully two years, he wonderfully profited in the Latin and Greek tongues." It was these on which Colet too was at work: neither of the two fellow-students, it may well be, ran their "full race in the study of the liberal sciences and divinity." It was said of More that he did not learn the meaning of a sentence from the knowledge of the words which composed it, but that rather his swift appreciation of the meaning of a sentence taught him the meaning of the words themselves. He had a genius above grammar, thought Pace. "Est enim Moro ingenium plusquam humanum." He learnt to write Latin with great ease, says Erasmus, and to speak it as well as his own tongue.<sup>1</sup> These studies, fruitful as they came to be, were not to the taste of the hardworking lawyer, and so the lad was taken away from Oxford, when he had but learnt to love Colet much and to love true religion and sacred learning more. It was well for poor clerks like Thomas Wolsey to linger on teaching their lads the grammar, or for scholars like Colet and Linacre and Latimer to dally with their books. There was other work for one who would be a lawyer.

<sup>1</sup> T. Leaver, 1551, in a sermon at S. Paul's Cross, reprinted by Mr. Arber.

Henry VIII. of England.

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 9.

<sup>2</sup> Stapleton, p. 168.

Accordingly young More was removed from Oxford, and in 1494 or 1495 entered at New Inn, a House which had not long been made an Inn of Chancery.<sup>2</sup> There he gave his attention to law, but not even then with an entire devotion. He could not forget the studies of his childhood or the teachings of his good friend Colet; for to this period may probably be attributed the composition of his Latin epigrams, published some years later, and those discursive wanderings among the writings of the Fathers which he afterwards utilized in his theological controversies. On February 12, 1496, he was admitted a student of Lincoln's Inn, where he was to obtain a more severe legal training. Here he continued "with a very small allowance"<sup>1</sup> until his call to the Bar in 1500.

<sup>1</sup> See Pace, De Fructu qui ex Doctrinâ Percipitur; Basle 1517; and many passages in the Letters of Erasmus.

<sup>2</sup> "The entry under 11 Henry VII. is as follows: 'Thomas More admissus est in Societatem. xij die Februar. a<sup>o</sup> sup. dicto et pardonat. est quatuor vacaciones ad instanciam Johis. More patris sui.' Although his name is not to be found on the books of New Inn, a Society then recently established, there is no doubt that he was placed there for some time. . . . He was in due time removed to Lincoln's Inn, and, having passed through the usual course of study, he was admitted as an utter barrister, but the early books of that Society do not

Meanwhile he formed another friendship, which partook, perhaps even more than his affection for Colet, of the nature of love. Erasmus, already famous, came to England with his pupil and friend, William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, and may have met More at the table of Colet's father on his way through London, as Mr. Seeböhm suggests.<sup>2</sup> Cresacre More tells us that at their first meeting, and before they were known to each other, an argument arose between them, in which Erasmus, after the scholastic fashion defending the weaker side, give the date of the calls to the Bar. The character he acquired as a lawyer may be judged from his soon after being selected by the governors to deliver lectures on the science at one of the Inns of Chancery dependent on their house. Furnival's Inn was the scene of his readings, which were so highly estimated that this annual appointment was renewed for three successive years."—Foss, Judges of England, vol. v. p. 206.

---

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 6.

<sup>2</sup> Oxford Reformers, p. 113. See too Professor Jebb's delightful Rede Lecture on Erasmus, p. 13.

was so hardly beset by the wit of his antagonist, that, remembering whom Colet declared to be "the one genius of England," he cried out, "Aut tu es Morus, aut nullus." "Aut tu es Erasmus, aut diabolus," was the retort. The acquaintance thus begun became a deep affection; before a few months had passed Erasmus is found speaking<sup>1</sup> of "my own More," and complaining, in all the glowing phrases of Renaissance friendship, of his delay in writing. Years did not change their feelings; their affection became famous: twenty years afterwards Tyndale sneeringly spoke of Erasmus as More's "darling," and in 1533 Erasmus himself says, "In Moro mihi videor extinctus, adeo μια ψυχή juxta Pythagoram duobus erat." It is the phrase of Michaelangelo in the very same year. "I cannot enjoy life without the soul," he wrote to Angelini, and it was Cavalieri that he meant by that endearing title. The Renaissance differed indeed in England and in Italy, but it had the same passionate sense of the value of friendship and fellow-work. Again, wrote Erasmus to Ulrich von Hutten, "More seems to be born for friendship, of which he is a true follower and fast keeper. . . . If any man desires a perfect pattern of friendship, there is none better than More." "When," says he, writing of his first introduction to English society, "when did Nature mould a character more gentle, endearing, and happy, than that of Thomas More?"

The friends did not often meet during the first two years of their acquaintance, for Erasmus was at

<sup>1</sup> Epp. vi. 11, p. 354.

Oxford. He left England in 1500, the last week of his stay being enlivened by a practical joke of More's, who, when they were both guests of Lord Mountjoy at Greenwich, induced Erasmus to take a walk, and led him to the royal nursery, where the unfortunate scholar was called upon for Latin verses, and was quite unable to produce them without preparation.<sup>1</sup>

Though Erasmus left England, More had now many friends around him. Grocyn had received the Rectory of S. Lawrence in the Old Jewry ; Linaere was also living in London ; a new friend, Lilly, also a scholar from Italy, lodged in the Charterhouse ; and early in 1505 Colet came into residence at S. Paul's.<sup>2</sup>

Having been called to the Bar, More returned, under the influence perhaps of his old friends, to the study of other than legal subjects. He delivered lectures in Grocyn's church on the De Civitate Dei, dwelling on the historical and philosophical lessons of that great work rather than on its theology. That the lectures were intended to advance the cause of the "New Learning" is evident from the manner in which Cresacre More speaks of them. He tells us also, following Stapleton, that Grocyn was deserted : "almost all England left his lecture and flocked to hear More." He was equally successful at the Bar ; he obtained a good practice, though he never undertook a case of the justice of which he was not satisfied ;<sup>3</sup> and he was appointed a reader at Furnival's Inn, where he delivered lectures for more than three years.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The letter describing the scene is given by Jortin, vol. iii. p. 105 sqq.

<sup>2</sup> Knight's Life of Colet, p. 63.

<sup>3</sup> Stapleton, c. ii. ; Roper, p. 6 ; Cres. More, p. 44.

But he did not therefore relax his study of theology, or vary his own religious life. He "applied his whole mind," says Erasmus, "to exercises of piety, looking to and pondering over the priesthood in vigils, fastings and prayers and the like austerities. In the which thing he showed himself far more prudent than most candidates, who thrust themselves rashly into that arduous profession, without any previous trial of their powers." He wore a hair shirt next his skin, fasted much, and heard mass every day. He lived, too, near the Charterhouse, daily attending its services, but without taking any vow. In spite of this devotion, and of his earnest desire for religious work, which induced him at one time to think of becoming a Franciscan, secular business increased upon him. In January 1504 he was returned to Parliament; for what constituency there seems to be no means of discovering. His return, probably due to Court influence, may be attributed—though there is no such hint in any of his biographies—to his recent poetical lament on the death of the Queen. Elizabeth, wife of Henry VII., died in February 1503, and More celebrated her virtues and deplored her loss in strains which may well have reached the royal ear. The Rufull Lamentation is in itself a work of little merit. Written on the model of the tragical soliloquies which had been introduced to English readers by Lydgate in his adaptation of Boccaccio's De Casibus

<sup>1</sup> Life by R. B.: Wordsworth's Ecclesiastical Biog. ii. p. 64.

Virorum Illustrium, it is in form much more elegant than in matter. The attempt at such a metre showed that English poetry would not long remain content with the shuffling jingle of its decadence, but the expression rarely rises above the commonplace. Two stanzas, however, may be quoted, the one as a specimen of the style, the other as an illustration of More's own views.

“ If worship might have kept me, I had not gone ;
If wit might have me saved, I needed not fear :
If money might have holp I lacked none.
But, O good God, what vayleth all this gear ?
When death is come, Thy mighty messenger,
Obey we must, there is no remedy.
Me hath he summoned and lo now here I lie.”

“ Yet was I late promised otherwise
This year to live in wealth and delice.
Lo, where unto cometh thy blandishing promise,
O false astrology and devinatrice.
Of God’s secret making thyself so wise.
How true for this year thy prophecy :
The year yet lasteth and lo now here I lie.”

This latter stanza shows that thus early More had repudiated the belief in astrology common even among the educated and eminent men of his time. He repeated his condemnation in several Latin epigrams and in the Utopia. For his views on this subject More may have been indebted to the writings of Pico della Mirandola, who, though he had not seen the folly of all magic, had denounced the imposture of judicial astrology. There was, perhaps, less crying cause for the denunciation in England than in Italy, where, in the midst of a laxity of religious and moral life, the pernicious superstition had managed subtly to link itself even with the victorious Humanism of the age; but the manner in which More derided the professors of the “science” at such a moment and in such a poem was not therefore the less daring.

The Parliament of 1504 met in a troublous time. Fears of dynastic war had not yet passed away, and men were feeling under Empson and Dudley, “those two caterpillars of the common wealth,” the power of an administration far more tyrannical than that of Morton. For seven years Parliament had not been summoned: money had been obtained from submissive convocations and from the exactions of the King’s ministers. Notwithstanding the unpopularity of these men, in which the King shared, the royal influence was strong enough to procure the choice of Dudley for Speaker in the Parliament of 1504.

According to Roper<sup>1</sup> three fifteenths were demanded as aids for the knighting of Prince Arthur, and the marriage of Margaret, the King’s eldest daughter, to the King of Scots. Thomas More came into notice by his strong opposition to their request: “at the last debating whereof he made such arguments and reasons there againstst that the King’s demands were thereby overthrown; so that one of the King’s Privy Chamber, named Mr. Tyler, brought word to the King out of the Parliament house, that a beardless boy had disappointed all his purposes.” The Court, in fact, had to be contented with a grant of £20,000 for each demand, of which £10,000 was remitted. This is the story told by Roper. But there seems reason to suppose that he has made a mistake, and has either confused the Parliament of 1504 with the great Council of 1488 or Parliament of 1489, or refers to some debate in a Council still later, not relating to a demand for any feudal aid. At any rate it is not recorded that three fifteenths were demanded in 1504, or that there was any opposition in Parliament on a monetary question.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 7.

The opposition—to return to Roper's story—was not forgotten or forgiven. The King's indignation could not vent itself on Thomas More, “forasmuch as he nothing having, nothing could lose”; he therefore revenged himself on his father, who was one of the Commissioners for the collection of the grant, by putting him in the Tower, and making him pay a fine of £100. Nor was the matter thus ended. Bishop Fox of Winchester, the Keeper of the Privy Seal, endeavoured to induce Thomas More to confess his offence, and thus become amenable to punishment, and he was only saved by a timely warning from the bishop's chaplain.<sup>2</sup>

To this year also belongs a most interesting record of More's private life, a letter to Colet, printed by <sup>1</sup> The difficulties of the question are considerable, and I cannot consider any suggestion that has yet been offered as wholly satisfactory. Perhaps the clearest statement is that of Bishop Stubbs (Lectures on Medieval and Modern History, p. 365): “The story that Sir Thomas More in a Parliament in 1502 prevented the Commons from granting an aid for the marriage of Margaret, though told on good authority, falls to the ground for the good reason that no Parliament was held in 1502, and that in 1504 the grant was actually made. More probably was instrumental in limiting the sum.” But Roper is the original authority for the statement, and he does not mention the year.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, pp. 7, 8.

Stapleton.<sup>1</sup> We learn from it that the young lawyer was living in seclusion, and under the spiritual direction of his old friend. His mind was disturbed by temptation and anxiety: at one moment he was determined to seek refuge in the cloister: at the next his ambition and his strong social sympathies were predominant. Of this state of mind the letter, written in October 1504, gives very clear indication. A short extract will suffice: "What is there here in this city which would move any man to live well, and doth not rather by a thousand devices draw him back, and with as many allurements swallow him up in all manner of wickedness who of himself were otherwise well disposed, and doth endeavour accordingly to climb up the painful hill of Virtue? Whithersoever that any man cometh, what can he find but fained love and the honey-poison of venomous flattery? In one place he shall find cruel hatred, in another hear nothing but quarrels and suits. Whithersoever we cast our eyes, what can we see but victualling-houses, fishmongers, butchers, cooks, pudding-makers, fishers or fowlers, who minister matter to our bellies and set forward the service of the world and the prince thereof and devil? Yea, the houses themselves,<sup>2</sup> I know not how, do deprive us of a great part of our sight of Heaven, so as the height of our buildings and not the circle of our horizon doth limit our prospect." Then after speaking of the simplicity of the country, More turns to the difficulty of finding spiritual instruction skilful enough for the urban population. "There came into the pulpit at S. Paul's divers men that promise to cure the diseases of others; but when they have all done, and made a fair and goodly discourse, their life on the other side doth so jar with their saying that they rather increase than assuage the griefs of their hearers. . . . But if such a man be accounted by learned men most fit to cure in whom the sick man hath greatest hope, who doubteth then but that you alone are the fittest in all London to heal their maladies whom every one is willing to suffer to touch their wounds and in whom what confidence every one hath and how ready every one is to do what you prescribe, both you have heretofore sufficiently tried, and now the desire that everybody hath of your speedy return may manifest the same. . . . In the meanwhile, I pass my time with Grocyn, Linacre, and Lilly; the first, as you know, the director of my life in your absence, the second the master of my studies, and the third my most dear companion. Farewell: and love me as you have ever done." London, October 21.

<sup>1</sup> Stapleton, cap. ii. p. 163.

<sup>2</sup> A significant comparison might be made between this passage and the Utopia, pp. 78, 79. (Arber's edition.)

To the perplexity which this letter suggests More had returned to his old Humanist studies, and his final decision was due probably in equal proportions to the living example of Colet, and to the direction which his literary interests now happily took. It is absurd to assert that More was disgusted with monastic corruption—that he "loathed monks as a disgrace to the Church." He was throughout his life a warm friend of the religious orders, and a devoted admirer of the monastic ideal. He condemned the vices of individuals; he said, as his great-grandson says, "that at that time religious men in England had somewhat degenerated from their ancient strictness and fervour of spirit"; but there is not the slightest sign that his decision to decline the monastic life was due in the smallest degree to a distrust of the system or a distaste for the theology of the Church.

On the other hand, it would be idle to deny that More turned now to what seemed to him a wider sphere, and that he was profoundly influenced in his choice of the New Learning and the Humanism of the day. The cloister, it was unquestionable, did not encourage literary pursuits. No one laughed more loudly than the young lawyer at the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum. He knew something of the miseries Erasmus had endured at Stein. At the same moment he was allured by the extraordinary attraction of the Italian scholar life. It was in fact not the Reformation but the Renaissance which took More from the cloister.<sup>1</sup> More turned then from the life of a professed religious to that of a Christian scholar and man of the world. He read at first in conjunction with Lilly, with whom he translated Greek epigrams. He wrote also "certain meters for the boke of Fortune and caused them to be printed in the begynnynge of that boke.”<sup>1</sup> Of these the following lines in his description of the fickle divinity may well be preserved—“Fast by her side doth weary Labour stand,

<sup>1</sup> Froude, Life and Letters of Erasmus, p. 97. Mr. Seebold asserts, most unwarrantably, so far as I can see - and I believe I have read all the Catholic biographies, certainly all the English ones—that "More's Catholic biographers have acknowledged that he turned in disgust from the impurity of the cloister."

Pale Fear also and Sorrow all bewept ;
Disdain and Hatred on that other hand
Eke restless watch from sleep with travail kept ;
His eyes drowsy and looking as he slept.
Before her standeth Danger and Envý, Flattery, Deceit, Mischief, and Tyranny.”

It is impossible to read the lines attentively without being reminded of some picture of Botticelli's. There is the same quaint beauty and far-away suggestiveness of an underlying pathos. More was learning to understand the complexity of life and struggling to embrace, maybe, all its many and divergent interests. His “Fortune” is like Botticelli's Calumny. It appeals as strangely, and as widely, at the parting of two ways of life.

It is no affectation to assume that More at this period was profoundly influenced by the Italian Renaissance. It is certain that his chief interest during these years was reserved for the works of Pico della Mirandola, to which he had been about this time directed. No attraction could have been more happy. From the narrowness which might not unnaturally have arisen from the severe attention which he had so long paid to the study of the law and from the self-centred religion which his Carthusian vigils had fostered, he must be aroused if he were to be of the real service to his country for which his eminent abilities and virtues qualified him. But to wean

<sup>1</sup> Eng. Works, p. v.

More from the purely ascetic and studious life which possessed such great attraction for his lofty spirit could be no easy task. That it was attempted by Colet is very probable, for we know that he advised More to marry. But the ultimate direction of the young lawyer's life was very greatly influenced by the life and writings of Pico. No example could be more fitting. In that fascinating hero of the Renaissance there was every beauty to attract, every virtue to secure, and every talent to confirm the admiration of such a man as More. In him no keen eye could detect the subtle flavour of a Pagan life. Nor was his Christianity cold, unsympathetic, or unreal. His abilities were remarkable even among his contemporaries, and his energy and devotion were as extraordinary. The whole story of his life, of its fair hopes, bitter disappointments, and calm peaceful ending, sounds like one of the poetic legends which the fancy of the age so freely created and cherished. In him men might seem to see the Tannhäuser whose fond and fickle passion for the Pagan goddess had vanished in the glorious dawn of Christianity. A young man, "of feature and shape seemly and beauteous, of stature goodly and high, of flesh tender and soft, his visage lovely and fair, his colour white intermingled with comely reds, his eyes grey and quick of look, his teeth white and even, his hair yellow and not too picked"<sup>1</sup>—so More describes him in his quaint translation of Gian Francesco's biography. "Nature," said Poliziano,<sup>2</sup> "seemed to have showered on this man, or hero, all her gifts. He was tall and finely moulded; from his face a something of divinity shone forth. Acute, and gifted with prodigious memory, in his studies he was indefatigable, in his style perspicuous and eloquent. You could not say whether his talents or his moral qualities conferred on him the greater lustre."

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 3.

<sup>2</sup> Quoted by Symonds, Rerival of Learning, p. 329.

Pico indeed fills a unique, if not a large, space in the history of the Renaissance. Learned like the ablest of his contemporaries in the classical languages, he was almost alone in making some claim to be an Orientalist, for he studied Hebrew, Arabic, and Chaldee. The favourite of Lorenzo de' Medici, he was also the friend and disciple of Savonarola, and in that age of strong temptations, intellectual and sensual, he had the wisdom to refuse the evil and choose the good. He combined in a remarkable degree the charm and the address of a man of the world with the studious devotion of a man of letters. "I desire you," he wrote to Andrea Corneo, "not so to embrace Martha that you should utterly forsake Mary. Love them and use them both, as well study as worldly occupation." Lorenzo had no courtier more courtly than he, yet he was always a bookworm at heart. His nephew says of him, at the time when he was most earnestly given to religion, that—

"He said once that whatsoever should happen, fell there never so great misadventure, he could never, as him thought, be moved to wrath, but if his chests perished in which his books lay that he had with great travail and watch compiled; but forasmuch as he considered that he laboured only for the love of God and profit of His Church and that he had dedicate unto Him all his works, his studies, and his doings, and sith he saw that sith God is almighty they could not miscarry but if it were either by His commandment or by His sufferance, he verily trusted sith God is all good that He would not suffer him to have that occasion of heaviness."

His curious learning was put to a curious use. He clung passionately to the idea of the unity of knowledge, the unity of truth. Thus he gave himself to an attempt to reconcile Platonic, neo-Platonic, and neo-Pythagorean opinions with Christianity. The difficulty of explaining the extraordinary complications into which Pico's strange jumble of erudition led him is very considerable. Confused he certainly was by his linguistic and cabalistic vagaries; but heretical, so far as he can be understood, he was not. He died at peace with the Church, and was buried in a Dominican habit in Savonarola's own San Marco, where the plain marble tablet that records his virtues and his fame may still be seen. It is rather from the writings of others, and especially from the touching little biography which More translated, little from his own books, that we learn his mental and physical semblance. Almost all those who write about him dwell upon his rare physical beauty. It was the special goodness of God, they say, that kept him pure in his later life. He was born, indeed, to be above sensual temptations ; his mind was essentially that of a mystic, and, having once tasted the joys of the spiritual life, he could never abandon them. There is much in his sayings and doings that reminds one of Molinos and his followers—

“ Of outward observances,” says his nephew, Gian Francesco, “ he gave no very great force—we speak not of those observances which the Church commandeth to be observed, for in those he was diligent, but we speak of those ceremonies which folk bring up, setting the very service of God aside, which is, as Christ saith, to be worshipped in spirit and in truth. But in the inward affects of the mind he cleaved to God with very fervent love and devotion.”

And worthy of Pascal are those famous words of his to Poliziano—

“ Love God, while we be in this body, we rather may than either know Him or by speech utter Him : and yet had we rather alway by knowledge never find the thing that we seek than by love possess the thing which also without love were in vain found.”

Typical as Pico was of the best side of the Italian Renaissance, no better influence could have touched More at the turning-point of his life, and his translation of the biography, with the letters and poems, marks a definite influence on the life of the English statesman. He was engaged on it, there seems no doubt, at the very time when he abandoned the idea of becoming a Carthusian and decided to live in the world, a student, a lawyer, a man of affairs, but always before all things a Christian. More had assimilated a great deal of the Italian culture of his age without adopting its vices. He was an "Italianate Englishman" in a different sense from that which the expression bore fifty years after his death. He had a genuine love of learning for its own sake and was a strenuous champion of the Greek as well as the Latin classics. He was himself already well acquainted with the chief savants and littérateurs of Europe, and his introduction of Pico to the English reader was probably undertaken with the intention of making England alive to the importance of the movement in Italian thought, as well as of showing how the progress of learning and inquiry was intimately bound up in the noblest lives with religion.

There is much similarity between Pico and More. Both were keen classical scholars, tinged with the mysticism of Renaissance imaginings, men of wide human interests, bent on bringing the Divine Spirit into every sphere of human thought. What has been said with such fine clearness of Pico's position is almost equally true of More's—

"This high dignity of man"—which was the characteristic belief of both Italian and Englishman in the revival of learning—"thus bringing the dust under his feet into sensible communion with the thoughts and affections of the angels, was supposed to belong to him, not as renewed by a religious system, but by his own natural right; and it was a counterpoise to the increasing tendency of medieval religion to deprecate man's nature, to sacrifice this or that element in it, to keep the degrading or painful accidents of it always in view. It helped man onward to that reassertion of himself, that rehabilitation of human nature, the body, the senses, the heart, the intelligence, which the Renaissance fulfils."

Like the Italian Humanist, More was penetrated with the sense of the beauty and the mystery of life. Rich colours and the strange recesses of occult investigation, the quaintness of old world learning, and the pure human beauty of classic ideals of literature and art, the thrilling chords of music and the simple innocence of animal life, the triumph of self-sacrifice, the joys of friendship and of love, the thoughts of Plato and the divine mysteries of the Christian religion, appealed each in their turn to his sensitive consciousness, and ascetic though he was his inner contemplation never blinded him to the loveliness of human life. Pico was as far removed from the ignorant bigotry satirized in the Letters of obscure men as from the scarce veiled Paganism of many disciples of the New Learning. To him it did not seem that Christianity was less true because Paganism was so beautiful, and the same thought was never absent from the mind of More.

The kinship of soul was natural. Powerfully influenced himself by the story of Pico's life, it was natural that More should desire to share the benefit with others. He accordingly published a translation of the Life and Works,<sup>1</sup> which he dedicated as a New

<sup>1</sup> "The Life of John Pieus, Earl of Mirandula, a great Lorde of Italy, an excellent connyng man in all sciences, and vertuous of liuing: with divers Epistles and other works of y<sup>e</sup> sayd John Pieus, full of greate science, vertue and

Year's gift to his "right entirely beloved sister in Christ Joyeuce Leigh."

The life begins with mention of the noble ancestry of Pico, and passes on to his extraordinary aptitude for study, reaching its chief interest with the chapter on his famous challenge at Rome. "There nine hundred questions he proposed of diverse and sundry matters, as well in logic and philosophy as in divinity, with great study picked and sought out as well of the Latin authors as of the Greeks; and partly set out of the secret mysteries of the Hebrews, Chaldees, and Arabies, and many things drawn out of the old obscure philosophy of Pythagoras, Trismegistus, and Orpheus, and many other things strange to all folk (except right few special excellent men), before that day not unknown only but also unheard." The story then tells how disappointment and failure attended this hardy challenger, and how he was led to think more especially of the religious life than he had yet done: how he burned five books of love-verses, "with other like fantasies he had made in his vulgar tongue": how he studied the sacred Scriptures and gave himself to prayer and almsgiving, purposing to walk from town to town, crucifix in hand, preaching Christ; how he died, and how the holy friar Savonarola glorified his memory. To this simple story were added two letters to his nephew Gian wisedome : whose life and woorkes bene worthy and digne to be read, and often to be had in memory. Translated out of Latin into Englishe by Maister Thomas More," occupies pp. 1-34 in More's English Works. It has also been edited by Mr. J. M. Rigg, London, 1890.

---

Francesco Pico, and one to his famous merchant friend, Andrea Corneo, marked by a strange spiritual beauty. There is also a meditation on Psalm xvi., and renderings of some of Pico's religious poetry. Quotations from these have been given by Mr. Seebohm in his Oxford Reformers: they are interesting rather as illustrating the character of Pico than that of More. It is sufficient to say that the spirit of piety which they breathe was as natural to the Englishman as to the Italian.

To the firm independent tone which marks the whole volume has been attributed, perhaps with truth, the step that More now took. He abandoned the idea of a monastic life, and, in 1505, he married.

The tale of his courtship as told by his son-in-law is peculiar, but characteristic both of the times and of the man.<sup>1</sup> It seems that Master John Colt, of the Essex family of that name,<sup>2</sup> having (as Roper significantly remarks) three daughters, often invited him to his house, New Hall. More thought the second daughter the "fairest and best favoured," and would gladly have made her his wife, but when he thought of the slight that might seem to be thrown upon her elder sister by the choice, he "of a certain pity framed his fancy towards her, and soon afterwards married her." Whatever may be truth of this story, there is no doubt that More was devotedly attached to his wife, and lived most happily with her. Erasmus, writing some years after her death, says that she was quite young, and that More had her taught various kinds of learning, and especially music. "His affection"—Father Bridgett very prettily notes in his Life of More<sup>1</sup>—"is shown by one little word in his own epitaph, composed more than twenty years after her death. He calls her More's dear little wife (uxorcula Mori)."<sup>2</sup> She was not his first love. As a boy of sixteen he fell in love. He was but a poor scholar.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 6; Cres. More, p. 29.

<sup>2</sup> I may be permitted here to refer to the valuable and complete History and Genealogy of the Colts (Edinburgh, 1887), by my brother-in-law, the present head of the family.

"Then the duenna and the guarded door Baffled the stars and bade us meet no more."

A quarter of a century later they met again, in 1519, and More wrote some pretty verses.

On his marriage he took a house in Bucklersbury, to be near his father. For the next few years we have only scattered notices of his life. He was evidently still studying and practising the Law. Erasmus seems to have visited him towards the end of the year 1505,<sup>3</sup> to have found him writing Latin epigrams, and to have written with him a declamation in the style of Lucian. The visit, however, was not a long one, and though More was surrounded by his friends, Colet, Grocyn, Lilly, and Linacre, he was by no means safe from the King's resentment. He had even serious thoughts of flight,<sup>4</sup> and apparently did visit Paris and Louvain.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Page 54.

<sup>2</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

<sup>3</sup> Roper, p. 8.

<sup>4</sup> Ep. ad Dorpium.

Meanwhile several children were born to him: three daughters, Margaret, Elizabeth, and Cicely: and lastly, in 1509, his son John. In this year the clouds which had overhung More's course dispersed, and on the accession of Henry VIII. he sprang, almost at one bound, into fame.

CHAPTER II.

HOME AND FRIENDS.

“Vidistine unquam hoc horto quidquam amoenius? Vix opinor in insulis Fortunatis esse quidquam jucundius. Plane mihi videor videre paradisum.”—ERASMUS, Colloq. Symposium.

THE accession of Henry VIII. may not unjustly be considered a decisive epoch. As far as such arbitrary divisions are ever satisfactory, it may seem to us now to have marked in England the end of what we call the Middle Ages, and the first distinct indication of the rise of the modern framework of society. Whatever be the value we may attach to modern statements of this kind, we cannot fail to recognize the fact that to the Englishmen of that age the year 1509 appeared undoubtedly to be the beginning of a new era. The country seemed to cast her nighted colour off, to awake from the sullen torpor in which she had watched the harsh avarice of the old King's declining years. All had been repression, and national policy had spoken only through the monarch; public feeling finding no congenial expression had been heard but as a stilled undercurrent of complaint. Now all was changed. The King was young and gallant, the representative of all the interests and thoughts of the nation. The daring spirit of adventure and excitement, which was still as much that of the knight-errant as that of the explorer; the delight in luxury, in rich, oriental, imaginative grandeur; the wide social and literary interests of the time,—were all reflected in Henry VIII. He was, in fact, at his accession, as prominent a figure in England's Renaissance as he afterwards became in her Reformation. All that spoke of the past gloom was removed. Empson and Dudley were hastily destroyed by a form of justice, with the spirit of which the new King could hardly have been in harmony. For ecclesiastics and lawyers the new Court substituted gallants and noblemen. And, for the first two years of the reign at least, King and people alike gave themselves up to enjoyment. The fairest hopes surrounded the new King; hopes of which More's congratulatory verses on the accession are the scarcely extravagant expression. The young barrister joined in the chorus of joy which greeted Henry VIII., and commemorated the coronation in several Latin poems. Of these the carmen gratulatorium<sup>1</sup> presented to the King himself is the longest and most important. It is introduced by a skilful explanation of the delay which occurred in its presentation. The artist who was to have illustrated it has been ill, More says; but his neglect is after all, perhaps, of no consequence, for so joyful an event must remain ever fresh in men's memories. The poem itself contains several characteristic passages, including no obscure reference to the tyranny of Henry VII. The following is More's description of the new King.

<sup>1</sup> Latin Works (edit. Louvain, 1569), p. 21.

“Tanta tibi est majestatis reverentia sacrae,
 Virtutes merito quam peperere tuae.
 Quae tibi sunt fnerant patrum quaecunque tuorum,
 Secula prisca quibus nil habuere prius.
 Est tibi namque tui princeps prudentia patris
 Estque tibi matris dextra benigna tuae.
 Est tibi mens aviae, mens religiosa paterna,
 Est tibi materni nobile pectus avi.
 Quid mirum ergo novo si gaudeat Anglia more Cum qualis nunquam rexerat ante regat ?”

It has been remarked that prudence is the sole virtue with which Henry VII., in a somewhat emphatic manner, is credited. The Queen Katherine has her full share in the compliments of the ode. She is compared to Cornelia, Tanaquil, Alcestis, and Penelope. The birth of a son is foretold; but the succession is regarded as already strong, in the presence of a nobility rejoiced at recovering their glory “nomen inane diu”—and of unshackled trade. The conclusion of the dedication shows the feeling of the whole composition. “Vale, princeps illustrissime, et, qui nobis ac rarus regum titulus est, amantissime.”

Other poems of More's describe the splendour of the coronation, when the gorgeous procession was blessed both by Phoebus and “Jovis uxor,” and the tournaments passed off without any disaster. Two poems also describe, one the union of the two roses in Henry VIII., the other the beginning of the golden age. The latter gives so characteristic an example of the style of More's Latin poems, that it may well be quoted—

Ad Regem.

“Cuncta Plato cecinit tempus quae proferat ullum,
Saepe fuisse olim, saepe aliquando fore.
Ver fugit ut celeri, celerique revertitur anno,
Bruma pari ut spacio quae fuit ante, reddit.
Sic, inquit, rapidi post longa volumina celi
Cuncta per innumeras sunt redditura vices.
Aurea prima sata est aetas, argentea post hanc.
Ærea post illam, ferrea nuper erat.
Aurea te, princeps, redierunt principe saecula ;
O possit vates hactenus esse Plato.”

The exaggeration which some writers consider to be too apparent in the whole series of verses may well be excused by the consideration that the accession of Henry VIII. was a personal relief to More, as well as a national joy. The cloud which had hung over him was removed ; and nothing now interfered with his prospects of success. Ere long he began his public career. Before we follow him into his political life it may be well to collect the many notices in the biographies and letters which touch upon his personal appearance, his home, his friends—and, abandoning a strictly chronological progress, to examine the more famous of his literary works. By this arrangement a certain connection of idea is obtained, which would otherwise of necessity be sacrificed.

Cresacre More gives a description of his grandfather's appearance derived from that of Erasmus, but the original is clearer and more precise. With it may well be compared that of Harpsfield, and the whole must be read in the light of Holbein's famous portraits.<sup>1</sup> He was of middle height and well-proportioned figure, save that through his habit of much writing, his right shoulder became higher than his left. His limbs were well formed, but his hands were a little clumsy—the pictures generally conceal them. His colour was pale, heightened only by a faint bloom; his hair dark-brown. His eyes were grey and speckled, “which,” says Erasmus, “as a mark of genius are much admired in England.” His expression, as can well be understood from Holbein’s masterly representation, was keen and inquiring, but entirely gentle and kind. “His voice was neither boisterous nor big; nor yet too small and shrill; he spake his words very distinctly, without any manner of hastiness or stuttering; and, albeit he delighted in all kinds of melody, he seemed not of his own nature to be apt to sing himself.”<sup>2</sup> He was intensely humorous. Yet “whatsoever jest he brought forth, he never laughed at any himself, but spake always so sadly that few could see by his look whether he spoke in earnest or in jest.”<sup>3</sup> He was careless, as men of quick humour often are, about his attire. He wore his gown awry, a habit which Ascham tells us was imitated by succeeding barristers.<sup>4</sup> He wore no silk or purple or chains of gold except when he could not avoid it:<sup>5</sup> he left the

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 281; Erasm. Epp. x. 30; Wordsworth’s Eccl. Biog. ii. p. 229.

<sup>2</sup> Yet like many who have “no vocal talents,” he delighted to sing in choir.

<sup>3</sup> Cres. More, p. 179; cf. Pace, De Fructu Doctrinae (ed. 1517), p. 82.

<sup>4</sup> Walter, Life of More, p. 373.      <sup>5</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

direction of his wardrobe entirely in the hands of one of his servants, whom he would call his “tutor.”<sup>1</sup> He cared as little about his food as about his dress. He rarely ate of more than one dish, though in the time of his wealth his table was always well provided<sup>2</sup>; and he preferred vegetables, milk, or eggs. He generally drank water; sometimes, to please others, very small beer; and, when it was necessary to drink a guest’s health, a little wine. He was never a strong man, but was able to go through his work well until a short time before his imprisonment. His temperament was calm and equable: of his remarkable presence of mind a curious anecdote has been told. One day as he was meditating on the leads of his gatehouse at Chelsea, a madman, who had managed to follow him, seized and attempted to hurl him over the battlements. More, encumbered by his gown, and unable to struggle with the strong man, bethought him of a happy expedient. His little dog was with him—“Stay,” he cried, “let us throw the dog down first, and see what sport that will be.” The madman left hold of him and tossed the dog over. “This is fine sport,” said More, “let us fetch him up and try it again.” Then, as the madman went down the stairs, More fastened the door and cried for help.<sup>3</sup>

He was an assiduous student and a fluent talker. His humour was suited to all kinds of society, but especially, says Erasmus, to that of ladies. He was charitable to a remarkable degree: one of his biographers calls him “the public patron of the poor.”<sup>1</sup> Not only did he invite his poor neighbours to his table, and hire a house at Chelsea for use as an hospital where he maintained many aged, sick, and indigent people at his own cost, but he would go privately among the poor and aid them by advice and liberal alms, “not by the penny or halfpenny, but sometimes five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty shillings, according to every one’s necessity.” He was greatly interested in natural history, and bought every strange creature from foreign lands that he could find. There was hardly any species of bird that he had not, says Harpsfield. “He kept an Ape, a Fox, a Wesill, a Feritt, and other beasts more rare. If there had been anie strange thing brought out of other countries and worthie to be looked upon, he was desirous to buie it; and all this was to the contention and pleasure of such as came to him; and himself now and then would make his recreation in beholding them.”<sup>2</sup> The story which Erasmus tells of his animals is famous. As one reads the passage in the colloquy de Amicitia one can imagine the grave smile of the great scholar as he saw the ape save the tame rabbits from the weasel—“ex quo perspicuum hoc animantium genus simiis esse carum. Ipsi cuniculi non intelligebant suum periculum; sed hostem suum per cancellam osculabantur. Simius opitulatus est pericli tanti simplicitati.”<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 27.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 26.

<sup>3</sup> Seward’s Anecdotes, vol. iv. p. 111.

<sup>1</sup> The Anonym. Life, printed by Wordsworth, Eccl. Biog. ii. 85.

<sup>2</sup> Wordsworth, Ecclesiastical Biography, ii. 230.

<sup>3</sup> Colloq. Amicitia, p. 529. The ape also appears in Holbein’s picture.

Like many other naturalists, he was very severe in his condemnation of hunting. Several of his epigrams contain stinging reflections on those who find their pleasure in it, and the Utopia contains perhaps the strongest indictment of field sport that an Englishman ever wrote. "All this exercise of hunting, as a thing unworthy to be used of free men, the Utopians have rejected to their butchers, to which craft, as we said before, they appoint their bondmen. For they count hunting the lowest, the vilest, and the most abject part of butchery, and the other part of it more profitable and more honest, as bringing much more commodity in that they kill beasts only for necessity. Whereas the hunter seeketh nothing but pleasure of the silly and woful beasts' slaughter and murder. The which pleasure in beholding death they think doth rise in the very beasts, either of a cruel affection, or else to be changed in continuance of time into cruelty, by long use of so cruel a pleasure."<sup>1</sup>

Second only to More's love of animals was his passion for music. Like Erasmus, he is painted by Holbein with a glass of flowers near him; but more especially "Klavikordi und ander seyten Spill uf ein Bretz."<sup>2</sup> He took care that his first wife should become an accomplished musician, and he induced his second to learn to play on several instruments. For music, as he says in the Utopia,<sup>1</sup> though it neither actually gives pleasure to any member of the body nor removes pain, “nevertheless tickleth and moveth our senses with a certain secret efficacy, and with a manifest motion turneth them to it.”<sup>2</sup> He cared for few other amusements, hating dice, tennis, and other games.<sup>3</sup> One of the traits which his biographers seem to have passed over is referred to in a letter of Erasmus—his fondness for the sea.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> To More's love of animals a very interesting note has been furnished me by a friend, in which the likeness between the Chancellor and one of his descendants—the famous Charles Waterton (by the marriage of Charles Waterton to Anne More, c. 1720, eighth in descent from Sir Thomas)—is suggested.

<sup>2</sup> MS. note of Holbein's on the Basle sketch of the picture of More's family.

Such was More as his friends saw him in his prosperity. Of his conduct in sorrow, before the days of affliction closed around him, two instances, too touching to be forgotten, are happily preserved. When the terrible sweating sickness had slain thousands in England, and the King and Wolsey were flying from place to place, to keep, if possible, out of the hands of Death, More’s daughter, Margaret Roper, whom he loved most of all his children, was stricken with the fearful plague, “so that both physicians and all others despaired of her recovery.” More “as he that most entirely tended her, being in no small heaviness for her, by prayer at God His hands sought to get remedy, whereupon after his usual manner going up into his

<sup>1</sup> Utopia, p. 113, R. Robinson’s trans.

<sup>2</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

<sup>3</sup> More was no indifferent musician himself. Pace, De Fructu Doctrinae, p. 53.

<sup>4</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 183 (Leyden edition of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2).

new Lodging, there in his chapel upon his knees most devoutly besought Almighty God that it should like His goodness, unto Whom nothing was impossible, if it were His blessed will, to vouchsafe graciously to hear his petition.”<sup>1</sup> And, as they believed, his prayer was heard, and she was “miraculously recovered, whom if it had pleased God at that time to take to His mercy, her father said he would never have meddled with worldly matters after.”

In a lesser grief the same spirit of deep spiritual trust is evident. The occasion was on More’s return from his second embassy to the Netherlands, in 1529. He had not been able to go home to his family, but was obliged to go straight to Court, where he learnt that a severe misfortune had happened to his household at Chelsea, and thereupon wrote to his wife the most simple and beautiful, perhaps, of all his letters. “Mistress Alice:—In my most hearty wise I recommend me to you. And whereas I am informed by my son Heron of the loss of our barns and of our neighbours also, with all the corn that was therein; albeit, saving God’s pleasure it is a great pity of so much good corn lost, yet, as it hath liked Him to send us such a chance, we must and are bounden not only to be content but also to be glad of this visitation. He sent us all we have lost; and since He hath by such a chance taken it away again, His pleasure be fulfilled. Let us never grudge thereat, but take it in good worth, and heartily thank Him as well for adversity as for prosperity. And peradventure we have more cause to thank Him for our loss than for our winning, for His wisdom better seeth what is good for us than we do ourselves. Therefore, I pray you, be of good cheer, and take all the household with you to church and there thank God both for what He hath given us, and for that which He hath taken from us, and for that which He hath left us, which, if it please Him, He can increase when He will; and if it please Him to leave us yet less, as His pleasure be it. I pray you to make good onsearch what my poor neighbours have lost, and bid them take no thought therefor; for if I should not have myself a spoon there shall be no poor neighbours of mine bear less by any chance happened in my house. I pray you be, with my children and your household, merry in God: and devise somewhat with your friends what way were best to take for provision to be made for corn for our household, and for seed this year coming, if we think it good that we keep the land still in our hands. And whether we think it good that we shall do so or not, yet I think it were not best suddenly thus to give it all up, and to put away our folk from our farm till we have somewhat advised us thereon. Howbeit if we have more now than we shall need, and which can get them other masters, ye may then discharge us of them; but I would not that any man were suddenly sent away, he wot not whither. At my coming hither I perceived none other than that I should have to abide the King's grace: but now I shall, I think, because of this chance, get leave to come home and see you; and then we shall further devise together upon all things, what order shall be best to take. And thus as heartily fare you well, with all our children, as ye can wish.—At Woodstock, the third day of September, by the hand of Thomas More.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 18.

It was natural that the household of such a man should be a marvel of order and happiness. All who saw it united in praise, and to their admiration we owe a more minute knowledge of the daily life of More’s family than can be obtained of any other household of the time. The two guiding principles of the domestic life were religion and learning. He rose early, Stapleton says at two in the morning, and was at prayer and study till seven. Every day he, after private prayer with his children, said the Litanies of the Saints and the Seven Penitential Psalms; and never did he omit to hear mass. Every evening he had a short service, which all the household attended, in his chapel. He was not satisfied, however, with this: he always retained his love for seclusion in religious exercises. After he had lived a while at Chelsea he built a chapel, library, and gallery, apart from his house, where he studied and prayed alone, and where on Fridays he usually remained the whole day. He undertook no business of importance without, after confession, receiving the Holy Sacrament. He enforced the meaning of his example by constant exhortation. He would often say to his wife and children, “We may not look at our pleasure to go to Heaven in feather-beds: it is not the way. For our Lord Himself went thither with great pain and many tribulations, which is the path wherein He walked there, and the servant may not look to be in better case than his master,”<sup>1</sup> and that he may well be admitted to Heaven who is very desirous of seeing God;<sup>2</sup> but that he that hath no such desire shall never gain admittance. Roper tells how the Duke of Norfolk coming one day to see his father-in-law, when he was Lord Chancellor, found him in church, in a surplice, singing among the choir. And “as they went home together arm in arm, the Duke said, ‘Godbody, Godbody, my Lord Chancellor, a parish clerk, a parish clerk, you do dishonour the King and his office.’ ‘Nay,’ quoth Sir Thomas, smiling upon the Duke, ‘your grace may not think that the King, your master and mine, will with me for serving God, his Master, be offended, or thereby count his office dishonoured.’”<sup>3</sup> He would often also carry the cross in the customary religious processions, and when advised during the lengthy progress at Rogation-tide to ride on account of his age and dignity, he answered that it beseemed not the servant to follow his Master on horseback when his Master had gone on foot.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Eng. Works, p. 1419.

Such humility was natural to him, and he was as stern to himself in private as he was humble abroad. He ever wore a hair shirt, which only his confessor and his wife and daughter Margaret knew of, till one day his daughter-in-law, a girl of a very different spirit, discovered the secret. “It pained his flesh,”

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 17.

<sup>3</sup> Roper, p. 30.

<sup>2</sup> Cres. More, p. 108.

<sup>4</sup> Stapleton, cap. vi. p. 221.

says his confessor, "till the blood was seen in his clothes."<sup>1</sup> Stern to himself, he was yet of a deeply loving nature—a man certainly very lovable and human, with keen and wide interests, and a gentle, kindly heart. The trifles of Court observance were irksome to him. "It is wonderful how negligent he is," wrote Erasmus in 1519, "as regards all the ceremonious forms in which most men make politeness to consist. He does not require them from others, nor is he anxious to use them himself in conversation or in feastings, though he is not ignorant of their use. But he thinks it unmanly to spend much time in such trifling. Once he was most adverse to attendance at Court, for he hates tyrants,<sup>2</sup> and he loves equality. It was only with much trouble that he was drawn to King Henry's Court, though nothing more gentle and unassuming than that King can be wished for. By nature he is fond of freedom and of leisure; yet though he enjoys leisure, no one is more watchful and patient when business demands."<sup>3</sup>

His first wife, whom there is little doubt—whether we accept the description of a good woman in his Latin poems<sup>4</sup> as applying to her or not—that he devotedly loved, died about six years after her marriage, and in a very short time the needs of his motherless children induced him to marry

<sup>1</sup> See the letter discovered in the Public Record Office and published by Mr. James Gairdner in the English Historical Review, Oct. 1892: and Wordsworth's Ecc. Biogr. ii. 82.

<sup>2</sup> One thinks of the many epigrams in tyrannos.

<sup>3</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

<sup>4</sup> To Candidus, Epigrams, ed. 1520, pp. 59—63.

again.<sup>1</sup> Within a month from her burial he came late on a Sunday night to his confessor, bringing a dispensation to be married next day "without any banus asking."<sup>2</sup> His second wife was a widow named Alice Middleton, whom he jestingly said was "nec bella nec puella."<sup>3</sup> It was reported that he had wooed her at first for a friend, and had married her rather at her suggestion than by his own desire. "No husband," said Erasmus, "ever gained from his wife by authority and severity so much obedience as More won by gentleness and pleasantry."<sup>4</sup> Several of the letters of his friends contain complimentary references to her. Ammonius, Latin secretary to Henry VIII., who was intimate both with More and Erasmus, writes to the latter in 1515, "Morus noster mellitissimus cum sua facillima conjugi, quae nunquam tui meminit quin tibi bene precetur, et liberis ac universa familia pulcherrime valet."<sup>5</sup>

Two years later More says to Erasmus, "My wife desires a million compliments, especially for your careful wish that she should live many years. She says she is the more anxious for this as she will have the longer to plague me."<sup>6</sup> Again, Erasmus, ridiculing, in 1518, the contemplated war against the Turks, with the Papal ordinances thereon—"prohibet Pontifex ne uxores absentium in bello domii voluptuentur, sed abstineant a cultus elegantia, <sup>1</sup> "Within two or three years," Cres. More, p. 32. "Within a few months," Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

<sup>2</sup> English Historical Review, vii. 14 (as above).

<sup>3</sup> Erasm. Epp. Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid.

<sup>5</sup> Letters and Papers, Henry VIII. (Brewer), vol. ii. 477.

<sup>6</sup> 15 Dec. 1517: Erasm. Epp. App. 221. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.)

John More S<sup>r</sup> Thomas More's Son.

JOHN MORE
(SON OF SIR THOMAS MORE)

ne utantur sericis, auro, aut gemmis aliis, fucum nullum attingant, vinum ne bibant, jejunent alternis diebus”—says, jokingly, that More's wife is so good that she would gladly obey these orders. Dame Alice, however, does not seem to have been entirely amiable. There are several stories recorded by Roper and Cresacre More which depict her as a careful but irritable housekeeper, fond of show, slow to appreciate her husband's wit, and too little in harmony with his deep spiritual religion. “Yet she proved a kind and careful stepmother to his children,”<sup>1</sup> And with his children it was that More's heart lay.

His only son, John, has been supposed by several writers to have been of somewhat weak mind or character. Their conjecture has the support of a saying of Sir Thomas, that his mother “had prayed so long for a boy that she brought forth one at last that would be a boy as long as he lived.” On the other hand, his face in Holbein's portrait is refined and intellectual, and he is represented with a book, as a student. In one of his father's letters there occurs a marked commendation of his diligence and ability.<sup>2</sup> “My son John's letter pleaseth me best, both because it was longer than the others, and because that he seems to me to have taken more pains than the rest: for he not only pointeth at the matter becomingly and speaketh elegantly, but he playeth also pleasantly with me and returneth my jests upon me again very wittily. And this he doth not only pleasantly but temperately withal, showing that he is mindful with whom he jesteth,—his father whom he endeavoureth so to delight that he is also afraid to offend.” Erasmus, too, speaks of him in complimentary terms, and in 1531 dedicated to him a translation of Aristotle.<sup>1</sup> He was married in 1519 to Anne Cresacre, daughter and heiress of Edward Cresacre of Barnborough, Yorkshire, a ward of the King,<sup>2</sup>—by an arrangement usual in those times. A mistake, however, is said to have occurred in this selection, and it has been conjectured that the damsel whom John More should have married was one of the four co-heiresses of Sir John Dynham, to whom the other part of Barnborough belonged.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 32.

<sup>2</sup> Stapleton, x. p. 258.

More’s eldest daughter, Margaret, was remarkable both for learning and virtue. References to her ability are constant in the correspondence of the happier years of her father’s life, and the memory of her devoted attachment is indissolubly linked with the sad story of his death. She married, about 1520, William Roper, son of Sir John Roper, a prothonotary of the King’s Bench, and “a man of good fortune and blameless morals and with an inclination to learning,”<sup>4</sup> who wrote the singularly beautiful biography which has been frequently referred to. “Margaret,” says Cresacre More, “was likest her father as well in favour as in wit.”<sup>5</sup> Reginald Pole

<sup>1</sup> Walter’s Life of More, p. 56. <sup>2</sup> Cres. More, p. 31.

<sup>3</sup> Hunter, preface to his edit. of Cres. More: q.v. also for a further account of John More. See also the list of his children in the entries in his book of Hours. Auction catalogue of Books of Baron v. Druffel, Munster, 1894, and Notes and Queries, Aug. 13, 1892, p. 121.

<sup>4</sup> Stapleton, cap. v. p. 118.

<sup>5</sup> Cres. More, p. 139.

MARGARET GIGGS
(MARRIED JOHN CLEMENT)

was once conversing with Sir Thomas when he received a letter from her. It was shown to the brilliant young scholar, who was astonished at it, and professed himself unable to believe that it had been the unaided composition of a woman.<sup>1</sup> The Bishop of Exeter on a similar occasion was equally delighted.<sup>2</sup> But no one gave her praise more judiciously or more gladly than More himself.<sup>3</sup>

Elizabeth, the second daughter, married a Mr. Dauncey, of whom we hear nothing but that on one occasion he complained of his father-in-law, when Chancellor, showing him no favour, and was justly reproved.<sup>4</sup> A special passage in Elizabeth's praise occurs in one of More's letters—"I take joy to hear that my daughter Elizabeth hath shown as great modesty in her mother's absence as any one could do if she had been present: let her know that that thing pleased me more than all the letters."<sup>5</sup>

Cicely, the youngest daughter, was as carefully taught as the others. She married Giles, son and heir of Sir John Heron, to whom Sir Thomas had been appointed guardian by the King in 1523 and 1524.<sup>6</sup> Giles Heron also seems to have expected countenance in an unjust suit from his father-in-law, but to have been met by a "flat decree against him."<sup>7</sup>

We have a charming illustration of More's affection

<sup>1</sup> Stapleton, cap. x. p. 263; cap. xi. pp. 266, 267, 268, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 25. <sup>3</sup> Stapleton, cap. x. p. 253.

<sup>4</sup> Roper, p. 25. <sup>5</sup> Stapleton, cap. x. p. 253.

<sup>6</sup> See grants dated March 5, 1523, and May 8, 1524, in Brewer, Letters and Papers, Henry VIII., vol. iii. 2900; vol. iv. 314. <sup>7</sup> Roper, p. 25.

for his children in his poetical epistle to them,<sup>1</sup> written when he was away on an embassy. We see from these tender verses how deeply he entered into all their pleasures, how gladly anticipated their desires, how sorrowfully reproved their faults.

“Ah ferus est, dicique pater non ille meretur
Qui lachrymas nati non<sup>2</sup> fleat ipse sui.”

Besides his own children there were his wife's daughter Alice, “a girl of great beauty and talent,”<sup>2</sup> who married the son of Sir Giles Alington, and who was devotedly attached to her stepfather, and an orphan girl named Margaret Giggs, receiving the same education, and as deeply loved by More.

For instruction there were always learned masters in the house at Chelsea. At first there was a little boy, John Clement, whose marvellous proficiency in study is noted with delight in the earlier letters between More and Erasmus,<sup>3</sup> and who afterwards married Margaret Giggs and became a learned physician and “reader of the phisicke-lecture at Oxford.” To him succeeded William Gunnel, a Cambridge scholar of celebrity, and others named Drue, Nicholas, and Hart. To the first of these a most interesting letter of More's has been preserved by Stapleton,<sup>4</sup> in which his scheme of education is drawn out, and great stress laid on the care that

<sup>1</sup> Epigrammata (2nd edit. Basil, 1520), p. 110. Seeböhm, pp. 421, 422; and Philomorus.

<sup>2</sup> Erasmus, Epp. xvii. 16.

<sup>3</sup> Brewer, ii. 1552; Erasm. Epp. App. 52. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.) See also Utopia, p. 23, and Cres. More, p. 126.

<sup>4</sup> Cap. x. p. 253.

should be taken lest the children should become proud of their learning or ability. Of Drue and Nicholas the following mention occurs in another letter.<sup>1</sup> "I rejoice that Master Drue is returned safe, of whose safety you know I was careful. If I loved you not exceedingly I should envy this your so great happiness, to have had so many great scholars for your masters. For I think Master Nicholas is with you also, and that you have learned of him much Astronomy; so that I hear that you have proceeded so far in this science that you now know not only the pole-star, the dog, and such like of the common constellations, but also — which argueth an absolute and cunning astronomer—the chief planets themselves; and you are able to discern the sun from the moon."

Besides More's children, who after their marriages still lived with their father and brought up their own children under his roof, at last he had eleven grandchildren to form a new "school." The family included also his father, Sir John More, who, in 1519, married a third wife,<sup>2</sup> and who lived in full possession of his faculties and in active discharge of his judicial duties till 1531. Of the filial reverence paid to him by his son many anecdotes are told, of which the most famous is that preserved by Roper.<sup>3</sup> "Whensoever he passed through Westminster Hall to his place in the Chancery, by the court of the King's Bench, if his father, one of the judges there, had been satte ere he came, he would go into the same court and there reverently kneeling downe in the sight of them all duely aske his father's blessing."

<sup>1</sup> More to his whole School, Stapleton, cap. x. p. 257.

<sup>2</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

<sup>3</sup> Page 26.

The fullest contemporary description of this happy household is the famous letter of Erasmus to Ulrich von Hutten. It has formed the groundwork of the pictures of all the biographers. There is another letter of the great Dutch scholar to the learned French humanist, Budaeus, which is not so frequently quoted. A passage may here be given which has an interest of its own as bearing upon the educational movement of the age. "It has been said that learning is unfavourable to common sense. There is no greater reader than More, and yet you will not find a man who is more complete master of all his faculties, on all occasions, and with all persons, more accessible, more ready to oblige, more quick-witted in conversation, or who combines such true prudence with such agreeable manners. His influence has been such that there is scarce a nobleman in the land who considers his children fit for their rank unless they have been well-educated, and learning has become fashionable at Court. I once thought with others that learning was quite useless to the female sex. More has quite changed my opinion. . . . Nor do I see why husbands should fear lest a learned wife should be less obedient, except they would exact from their wives what should not be exacted from honest and virtuous dames." He goes on to talk of the uselessness of sermons to foolish women, and adds—"More's daughters, and such as they, can form an opinion on what they have heard and discriminate the good from the bad." He concluded with an anecdote—that he had once told More that he would grieve with greater sorrow if he lost his daughters upon whom he had bestowed so much care, and was answered—"If they are to die, I would rather they died learned than ignorant."<sup>1</sup>

Among More's household a word must be given to the steward and the fool. John Harris, "a man of good understanding and judgment, and a very trusty servant,"<sup>2</sup> was often consulted by More "in his greatest affairs and studies." Henry Pattison, the fool, was deeply attached to his master. An interesting passage in the Utopia well illustrates his position in More's household. "They [the Utopians] have singular delight and pleasure in fools: and as it is a great reproach to do any of them hurt or injury, so they prohibit not to take pleasure of foolishness. For that, they think, doth much good to the fools. And if any man be so sad and stern that he cannot laugh neither at their words, nor at their deeds, none of them be committed to his tuition; for fear lest he should not entreat them gently and favourably enough, to whom they should bring no delectation (for other goodness in them is none), much less any profit should they yield him."<sup>3</sup> An anecdote of Pattison, which has been preserved by Ellis Heywood, shows that he was one of those jesters who owed their position as much to infirmity as wit. One day he was standing by the table when More was dining, and, noticing that one of the guests had a remarkably large nose, after he had gazed upon it for some time, suddenly exclaimed—"What a terrific nose that gentleman has!" When all pretended not to hear him, Pattison saw that he had made a mistake, and tried to set himself right by saying, "How I lied in my throat when I said that that gentleman's nose was so monstrously large. On the faith of a gentleman, it is in reality rather a small one." At this the company with difficulty restrained their laughter, and More made signs that the fool should be turned out of the room. But Pattison, who had a great opinion of his own powers of bringing everything to a happy conclusion, determined to recover his credit by a great effort, placed himself in More's seat at the head of the table, and called out—"There is one thing I would have you know—that gentleman has not the least atom of a nose."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. xvii. 16; Brewer, iii. 1527.

<sup>2</sup> Cres. More, p. 27.

<sup>3</sup> Utopia, p. 126.

Erasmus says that so admirable was the management of the household—for no idleness was allowed, but some worked in the garden, others sang or played instruments,<sup>2</sup> but none were allowed cards or dice—so careful the training, "that there was happiness fated for the servants of that house; none lived but in better estate after More's death; none ever was touched with the least aspersion of any evil fame."<sup>3</sup> Such was the happy household which had grown up around More in his home at Chelsea, whither he had removed from Bucklersbury after his first wife's death. The house was situated about a hundred yards from the Thames, at the north end of Beaufort Row, and remained standing for more than two centuries after his death, until it was at last pulled down by Sir Hans Sloane.

<sup>1</sup> Ellis Heywood, Il Moro (Florence, 1556), pp. 52, 53.

<sup>2</sup> Cres. More, p. 91. <sup>3</sup> Stapleton, cap. ix. p. 249.

Ellis Heywood, in introducing a dialogue on the sources of happiness, supposed to take place in More's garden, has given a beautiful description of the scene and of the man.<sup>1</sup>

“Along the banks of the Thames there are many fine houses and castles situated in beautiful spots, in one of which dwelt Sir Thomas More, ‘huomo per la sua virtù assai conosciuto.’ It was a splendid and comfortable residence, and to this place it was his custom to retire when weary of the city. There, both because of its nearness to London and of the admirable character of its owner, men distinguished for wit and learning who dwelt in the city were accustomed frequently to meet; where when alone and at ease they would enter into some argument or discourse on things pertaining to human life; and, since each used as he could his intellect and knowledge, their arguments were attended with great profit to each other.” One day he tells us that six friends, who had dined with More, “retired after dinner into the garden, distant about two stone-throws from the house, and all went together to stand upon a small green mound. . . . From one part almost the whole of the noble city of London was visible, and from another the beautiful Thames, with green meadows and wooded hills all around.”

<sup>1</sup> Il Moro, p. 9, et seq.

The scene too "had a charm of its own. It was crowned with an almost perpetual verdure, and had flowering shrubs and the branches of fruit trees that grew near interwoven in a manner so beautiful that it seemed like a living tapestry worked by Nature herself." There the friends discussed in true Renaissance fashion one of the common topics of humanistic inquiry.

To this house so rare in beauty, external and spiritual, there were naturally many visitors. Never came there to London a poor student from Oxford or Cambridge but he was sure of a welcome at Chelsea. "Quem ille vel mediocriter eruditum ab se dimisit indonatum?" says one of More's friends. "Aut quis fuit tam alienus, de quo non studuerit bene mereri? Multi non favent nisi suis, Galli Gallis, Germani Germanis, Scotti Scottis: at ille in Hybernos, in Germanos, in Gallos, in Scythas et Indos amico fuit animo."<sup>1</sup> And besides such stray guests there were the old and tried friends, who, when they could not be at Chelsea, preserved their memory of More by constant letters. Erasmus, who had made so firm a friendship with him in his youth, loved him till his death. He had spent several weeks in the house at Bucklersbury, during the first year of More's married life. There he completed that biting satire, whose punning title was to be a remembrance of the friend who sympathized so warmly with its method, and whose presence was to the author "more sweet than any thing in life.”<sup>1</sup> The Encomium Moriae gives a very clear insight into the feelings with which the purer spirits of those eventful years looked upon the confusion of the world in which they lived. As an exposition of the fears and the aspirations of the two friends it may well be regarded as a sportive prologue to the more serious work Utopia. Its appearance was naturally not unnoticed or its matter uncondemned: and More came forward to defend it.

<sup>1</sup> Epistola fidelis de morte Thomae Mori. Cf. also Roper, p. 13; Cres. More, p. 59.

It was a happy idea to send Folly abroad with her caps and bells to satirize the grossness and the ignorance that wise men noted and Popes seemed to wink at. It was the first attempt of the new humanism to treat the absurdities of decadent scholasticism and decaying religion in a popular style. In Moria Erasmus spoke ad populum,<sup>2</sup> as in the Novum Instrumentum, four years later,<sup>3</sup> he spoke ad clerum. It was the hasty work of a few days’ writing, and the iron was red-hot on which it so sharply struck. Folly is the mistress and teacher of the world, he cried; and most of all she dwells among philosophers and theologians and monks. She is never so much at home as when she teaches her children to explain the mysteries of faith and to justify the practices of superstition. To her is due the belief in the miraculous working of images, in indulgences as bills drawn upon the spiritual treasury of the Church, in the automatic efficacy of vain repetitions of sacred offices. The questions, he says, that belong to "illuminated" theologians are such as these—"Does the category of time belong to the Divine generation? Is there more than one relation of filiation in Christ? Whether the proposition God the Father hates the Son can be maintained? Whether God could be hypostatically united to a woman, the devil, an ass, a gourd, a flint?"<sup>1</sup> And then he bitterly adds, "no doubt they devoutly consecrated the Eucharist," little as they were competent to define the doctrine. Nor was he content to deal with generalities—monks in their ignorant idleness, friars in their dirt and buffoonery, cardinals in their avarice, even Pope Julius II. himself in his mad scheming for power, all come under the lash of Folly. Not only obscurantism was scourged, but every form of spiritual wickedness in high places. And who could answer? Might not Folly speak, and should wise men reply?

<sup>1</sup> Preface to Encomium Moriae.

<sup>2</sup> The learned writer of an extremely able and valuable article in the Quarterly Review, January 1895, states that none “of Erasmus’s works” appeal ad populum. But I think it is accurate to say that the Moria and the Colloquies certainly appeal to a wide public.

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Froude states wrongly (Erasmus, p. 122) that the Encomium Moriae “was brought out almost simultaneously with an edition of the New Testament.” Probably he was confusing the former with Erasmus’s edition of S. Jerome, which appeared in 1516.

It was a masterly book—and its strength lay not a little in the fact that it was an appeal from a besotted Theology to a Religion that had learnt to keep its eyes open, and from the false scholasticism to the true. It was certainly not intended "to turn the whole existing system of Theology into ridicule : ”<sup>1</sup> it was a protest on behalf of that system against the ignorance of those who professed to interpret it.

<sup>1</sup> I venture to use, with a slight alteration, the translation of this passage given in the article already referred to in the Quarterly Review, January 1895.

Such, very briefly, was the book which Erasmus wrote in More’s house. It was the fruit of their talks together, and it came more nearly than anything else that the two friends did to be a piece of fellow-work. Erasmus wrote it ; More defended it—and they both spoke as loyal sons of the Catholic Church. And the rulers of the Church spoke no word of condemnation. Julius himself did not protest, and his successor, Leo X., spoke of the book with admiration and delight.

The work of Folly ended, the two friends turned aside to more serious business—More to his Utopia, and Erasmus to S. Jerome and the New Testament. In the former the great Dutch scholar was to range himself on the side of the Fathers in the questions that were soon to be debated by the world ; in the latter he was to appeal to the critical study of the Bible as the one true basis of the Church’s doctrine. Erasmus did not give the Bible to an ignorant age. “ Popular stories of the Bible being unknown, of the total indifference of the friars to learning, rest like most popular stories on vulgar credulity.”<sup>2</sup> He was attacked not because he revealed mysteries to the vulgar, but because of his audacity in attempting to revise the Vulgate, and because it was said he could neither translate nor comment with accuracy upon Holy Writ. Not as an iconoclast, but as the father of modern exegesis, it was that he needed, and found, a defender in the educated orthodoxy of More.

<sup>1</sup> Froude, Erasmus, p. 124.

<sup>2</sup> Brewer, Reign of Henry VIII., i. 287 ; contrast Froude’s Erasmus, pp. 112, 113.

From the time of the completion of the Encomium Moriae until July 1514, Erasmus remained in England, and the friends saw each other constantly. Erasmus was principally at Cambridge; and between him and More several interesting letters passed. In December 1510, we find an epistle from the Dutch to the English scholar, detailing the difficulties which he met with in the study of Greek from the ignorant Masters at Cambridge, and urging the English humanist to throw his weight into the scale in favour of the New Learning.<sup>1</sup>

Writing in August 1511, to Ammonius, Erasmus complains of More's negligent correspondence, but says that he would be unreasonable indeed if he did not pardon him, as he is now immersed in grave business.<sup>2</sup> The letters of this year show also the intimate connexion between Ammonius, whose praise of the household at Chelsea has already been mentioned, and the two friends. During the long vacation of 1511, while Erasmus was in London, Ammonius was staying with More, and there was much regret that they chanced to miss each other,<sup>3</sup> but the scholar hoped to meet the diplomatist in January, when he would find London more pleasant than Cambridge.<sup>4</sup> The letters of the same period contain constant references also to the intimacy

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. vii. 15.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. viii. 2; viii. 23.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. Epp. viii. 1.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. viii. 7.

existing between Warham, Fisher, Colet—who was then busy with his new school—and More. For a time the correspondence almost ceased. More was deep in business: his work at the Bar increased rapidly, and he had been made under-sheriff of London. He was being slowly drawn too into the service of the Court, and what leisure he had was given to the composition of his History of Richard III, and afterwards to the preparation of his Utopia. After a while the circle of friends gathered again around him, as after his second marriage he removed to Chelsea. In May 1515, he was sent on a mission to Bruges, which will be mentioned more fully in connexion with his political life. Meanwhile Erasmus had left England, and had been deeply engaged in literary work, having completed—besides many books of very different sorts—his great Novum Testamentum.

More, on his return to England, at the successful termination of his embassy, wrote to him in February 1516,<sup>1</sup> complaining that he had only written thrice since he left England. “Were I to lie with most solemn countenance,” he continues, “and swear I had replied to you as often, it is ten to one you would not believe me; especially as you know me so well, how idle I am in answering letters, and not so superstitiously veracious as to reckon every white lie as black as murder.” More’s return to Court is mentioned by Ammonius in a letter to Erasmus on the 17th of the same month,<sup>2</sup> and his devotion to Wolsey noticed. Writing a few days later, More sent £20 from Warham, perhaps in answer to the verses which he had addressed to him on the appearance of his friend's New Testament. The archbishop, said More, had made the great work possible for Erasmus.

<sup>1</sup> Brewer, ii. 1512.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. ii. 1551.

“Hunc petit ille sui fructum, Pater alme, laboris, Charus ut hoc tu sis omnibus, ille tibi.”

In the autumn of the same year Erasmus came to England, and during his visit—he was staying principally with Fisher at Rochester—constant letters of the old mirthful style passed between him and More. The chief part of the Utopia had now been finished, and the first or introductory portion was being prepared. On November 12, Gerard Bronchorst, a scholar of Nimeguen, wrote to Erasmus that he had arranged for Thierry, who was bringing out the Institutio Principis Christiani, to publish the Utopia.

It appeared at the end of 1516, and at once achieved an enormous success. More, known before to a wide circle of friends as possessed of great talents, became a man of European fame. Before three months had passed, a new edition was being thought of. On March 1, 1517, Erasmus wrote to More, sending him Reuchlin's works, and saying that as soon as the MS. had been revised he would send it to Basle or Paris.<sup>1</sup> It was decided that the second edition should be published at Basle; and, on August 25, Erasmus wrote from Louvain to the great printer, Froben, sending him the Utopia and Epigrams, with a warm eulogy of More. He rejoices, says the letter, to see the high opinion he always held now confirmed by all the learned. What, he adds, might not this great genius, now overwhelmed by political and domestic cares, have accomplished had he been educated in Italy, or devoted himself entirely to letters?<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. vii. 16.

More wrote to Erasmus on September 3, sending a revised copy, and giving suggestions as to the contemplated publication of his Epigrams.<sup>2</sup> Meanwhile a second edition of the Utopia had been brought out at Paris by Lupset, with an eulogistic epistle from Budaeus; and the Basle edition appeared in November.

On October 7, More wrote again to his friend,<sup>3</sup> having received a picture of Erasmus and Petrus Ægidius, sent him by the latter,<sup>4</sup> and said with great simplicity and feeling, that if there was one thought of ambition in his mind it was the pleasure he felt in knowing that his name would always hereafter be associated with that of Erasmus. The correspondence was now constant; not only did the two friends write on every subject of interest, but More was of great use to Erasmus in business affairs, such as the matter of his pension from Warham, paid through the banker Maruffo.<sup>5</sup>

At the beginning of 1518, Erasmus utters a plaintive regret that More, "though he will serve

<sup>1</sup> Brewer, ii. 3627.

<sup>2</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 174. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.) <sup>3</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 193.

<sup>4</sup> See his verses thereon (Epigrams). Brewer suggests that it was by Quintin Matsys.

<sup>5</sup> E. g. Brewer, ii. 2004; ii. 2367; ii. 2409.

the best of kings," is, by his employment at Court, lost to him and to letters.<sup>1</sup> The fame of the discoverer of Utopia had now become so great that men were anxious to hear of his private life, and in July 1519, Erasmus had to write to Ulrich von Hutten a description of how perfectly the ideal state was pictured in little in More's household at Chelsea—a letter to which frequent reference has already been made. At the same time More was defending his friend against the attacks of the more bigoted and ignorant of the clergy. A monk had written to him, warning him lest he should be corrupted by associating with the contemner of the Vulgate. More immediately replied.<sup>2</sup> He would be indeed ungrateful, he said, if he did not thank his correspondent who dashes over rocks and precipices at the imminent hazard of his life to save More from stumbling, who is leisurely walking in perfect security on level ground.

That one who had been so candid should become a violent partisan was indeed a wonder to the gentle soul of More.<sup>3</sup> The monk has been his "dearest friend," but no less dear was Erasmus; and the cause of truth, with which his great work seemed to be indissolubly connected, was dearer still. It is clear that More felt both that the question of the study of Greek was vital alike to Christianity and to learning, and also that the enmity of the monastic clergy to the new studies, and in particular to Erasmus, alike in his serious and in his satirical writing, was based only on ignorance, and could be overcome by a temperate and intelligent statement of the case from a learned and Catholic layman. More, throughout his very lengthy letter, argues that it is Erasmus not his opponents who represents the mind of the Church, and points the contrast between the good work he was doing and the wickedness of those who distorted Scripture and those who used the rules of their orders only as the groundwork of debate and faction. A friend of Erasmus and of More himself in his youth, the monk who received this appeal may well have been won over to see the New Learning in a new light. The names of Colet, Fisher, Warham, Mountjoy, Pace and Grocyn—representing in such different stations the wide influence of the movement—may well have brought him to see that Erasmus was the friend, not the enemy, of the Church. And so More leaves him, and it must have been in sadness. His whole tone shows the intensity with which he felt the brute force of the dense ignorance with which the Church Reformers had to contend; and he felt it most when he wrote this letter, for just then his dear friend, the most enthusiastic and impetuous, yet the saintliest, of the new party, had passed away. John Colet died on September 15, 1519. "For centuries," said More, "we have not had among us any man more learned or more holy."

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 311. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.)

<sup>2</sup> Epistolae aliquot eruditorum virorum. Basil, 1520, pp. 92—138. Jortin's Erasmus, iii. 365 sqq. See also Froude's Erasmus, p. 135 sqq., an extremely inaccurate version, entirely altering the tone of More's letter, which is one of temperate and friendly remonstrance.

<sup>3</sup> More's Latin does not contain the words, "Before you were a priest you had candour and charity; now that you have become a monk some devil has possession of you." The Latin also by no means warrants some of the worst charges that Mr. Froude appears to make More bring against monks.

More, Colet, and Erasmus had felt for each other as perhaps none others at the time had felt, and their characters had strengthened each other where they most needed support. Colet's holiness had been an inspiration to Erasmus, his perfect sanity of judgment a wise restraint on More. Now the two friends who were left were drawn more closely together by the loss of him they loved.

In 1520, their correspondence was chiefly concerned with the testy French poet Brixius, and we may leave the mention of it till we treat of the Epigrams which refer to him. But the year also served to turn More's thoughts into another channel. He was forsaking literature for politics, and the change is clearly reflected in his correspondence. Instead of weekly or monthly letters to Erasmus, he wrote almost daily to Wolsey. Political and religious troubles were thickening around him, and he was being forced into practical contact with those great problems which in the Utopia he had examined from a distance. In 1525, Erasmus wrote to him to make up some quarrel that had arisen with Polydore Vergil, the historian.<sup>1</sup> At last More broke his silence, and writing on December 18, 1525,<sup>2</sup> acknowledged that he had left several letters unanswered. Anxious thoughts—the progress of Lutheran opinions and the King's answer to the heretic's book, the terrible Bauernkrieg, and Erasmus's own illness—weighed upon him, yet he did not forget to promise his best help to Holbein, whom his friend had recently committed to his charge. Then follows another break in the correspondence. At length, in February 1528,<sup>1</sup> Erasmus wrote to More speaking of Henry VIII.'s request to him to return to England, but complaining that there was no hope of peace but in the grave. The new development of Anabaptist doctrines—more widespread, he declares, than any one conjectures—filled him with horror. In the next year Erasmus received Holbein's sketch for the picture of More's family, and immediately wrote to Margaret Roper to express his delight.<sup>2</sup> "Methought," he said, "I saw shining through this beautiful household a soul even more beautiful"; and he sent the warmest messages to the kinsfolk in their home.

<sup>1</sup> The letter is lost, but that of Erasmus to Polydore Vergil is Epp. p. 888.

<sup>2</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 334. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.) Brewer, iv. 1826.

Then another pause occurs. More, as Chancellor, was overweighted with work, religious and secular, and the letters to his friend, so constant in the happy, peaceful portion of his life, ceased altogether. But when he resigned the office which had become daily more and more irksome to him, he at once resumed the correspondence. On June 5, 1532, More gave up the great seal into the hands of the King; two days later he wrote to tell the story to Erasmus,<sup>1</sup> rejoicing in being freed from public affairs, that he might live only to God and himself. Yet even then he thought most of the religious troubles, and his letter is almost entirely taken up with fears of the progress of heresy. Erasmus sent the letter to John, Bishop of Vienne, with a high eulogium of the writer. At the beginning of the next year More wrote again,<sup>2</sup> thanking Erasmus for two letters, expressing his joy that Cranmer, the new archbishop, was as favourable to his friend as Warham had been, and dwelling with pathetic emphasis on the bitterness of public reports. But "so long as God approves of my doings I do not care what men say," was his conclusion, and might well be the motto of his life. The misery of his last days was now upon him; and thus in silence the well-tried friendship ended. "Men can neither speak nor hold their peace without danger," wrote Vives to Erasmus, when telling him of More's imprisonment. Letters passed constantly between the great foreign scholar and his English friends. To More himself it was dangerous to write, but in his silence Erasmus thought the more deeply; and when at length More fell a victim to the King's policy and passion, his voice was the keenest and most bitter that was raised in execration of the deed.

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. p. 1062. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.)

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. Epp. p. 1232 (ibid.).

The intimate and long-continued friendship between More and Erasmus is a significant fact in the history of the Reformation. It shows that in the minds of the clearest thinkers of the day there was no necessary opposition between Religion and Humanism, between the Catholic Faith and the internal reforms which the Church's organization was everywhere felt to need. When it is sought to paint More as a convinced and constant supporter of the whole system of the unreformed Church and the medieval Papacy, it can only be by ignoring his consistent friendship with the sharpest of its critics. He knew as well as his friend the stern truth of many charges against monastic discipline, to which Popes themselves listened in silence, and the voice of Moria was little less his than that of the man who actually gave it to the world. It is impossible to read More's writings with an unbiassed mind without feeling that he, who laid down his life for the Church, yet felt to the full the horror and the danger of her corruptions. His satires against worldliness and ignorance among the clergy are as keen as those of Erasmus, if they are less numerous. Yet he died in persistent opposition to a Lutheran or an Erastian Revolution. Was he inconsistent? Erasmus did not think so. Together they had thought, in mirth and yet half tearfully, of the wounds the Church was receiving in the house of her friends, and, when death came to one of them, in heart they were not divided. "Erasmus, my darling," said his life-long friend, "is my dear darling still."

<sup>1</sup> Erasin. Epp. p. 1856.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. Epp. p. 1432. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.) Stapleton, c. vii. p. 231.

Next to this classic friendship, More owed most to the companionship of Colet. When they both lived in London they often met—and thus few traces of their connexion, which their letters might have given, are preserved. More aided Colet in the founding of his school by advice and inquiry. Little more do we know of their common work. Theirs was a peaceful friendship, into which no disturbing element entered, for Colet died before More had been drawn into the troubles of the time.

Among other scholars whose friendship More had first known at Oxford, we find occasional reference in his later life to Grocyn, Lilly, whom Colet sought as master of his school, and Linacre, and a few humorous notices of William Latimer.

Warham was a friend rather of Erasmus than of More, but the latter was constantly a means of communication between the archbishop and the Dutch scholar. From no man had the earlier efforts of the two friends met with warmer encouragement. The letter which More wrote to him on his resignation of the Chancellorship was friendly as well as respectful.<sup>1</sup> After compliments on his conduct of the office and expressions of sympathy with his intention in resigning it, he lays before the archbishop, in modest phrase, his own "little book," which had just been published. "Though fully aware how unworthy it is of your dignity, learning, and experience, yet, knowing your candour and indulgence to every endeavour of mine, I have summoned up courage enough to send it to you; and, should the writing be deemed of little worth, the writer is anxious to find favour."

Cuthbert Tunstal, Master of the Rolls, his com-

<sup>1</sup> Stapleton, cap. 7.

panion in his first embassy, occupied a place next to Erasmus in More's heart.<sup>1</sup> The references to him in the letters are always most affectionate; and of no man has More left on record a higher opinion. In the Epitaph which he wrote for himself he refers with pride to his having been joined in embassy with one "than whom the whole world hath not a man more learned, wise, or good." The name of Tunstal also has been immortalized in the first book of the Utopia.<sup>2</sup> But the amplest memorial of their friendship is contained in two letters of More's.<sup>3</sup> "Although every letter I receive from you, dearest friend, is very pleasant to me, yet that which you wrote last was most welcome, for, besides the other praises which the rest of your letters deserve for their eloquence, this last yields a peculiar grace, for that it contains your own opinion (I would that it were as true as it is favourable) of my Utopia. . . . I almost persuade myself that all those things which you speak of it are true, knowing you to be far from all dissimulation, and myself too humble to need flattery and too dear to you to be mocked. Wherefore, whether you have seen the truth unfeignedly, I rejoice in your judgment, or whether your affection to me hath blinded your judgment, I am no less delighted by your love." Or again, "The amber which you sent me—being a precious sepulchre of flies—was in many respects most welcome to me; for the matter thereof may bear comparison in colour and brightness with any precious stone, and the form is more excellent because it represents the figure of a heart, as it were the emblem of our love; from which I take your meaning to be that between us it will never fly away, and yet be always without corruption; because I see the fly—which hath wings like Cupid, and is as fickle—so shut up and enclosed in the amber that it cannot fly away, and so embalmed and preserved that it cannot perish. I am not so much as once troubled that I cannot send you a like gift; for I know you do not expect an interchange of tokens."

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 150. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii pt. 2.) <sup>2</sup> Page 27.

<sup>3</sup> Stapleton, C. G., p. 201, et seq.

That Tunstal fully reciprocated More's affection is seen in his dedication to him of his treatise De Arte Supputandi. "When I considered to which of all my friends I should dedicate their collection, I thought you the most fit, because of the tender friendship which of a long time hath been between us, and of the sincerity of your mind."

Another of More's friends was Richard Pace, hardly less famous as a scholar than as a diplomatist. He had been educated in Italy, and there had become acquainted with Erasmus, Tunstal, and William Latimer,<sup>1</sup> through whom he gained the friendship of More. Writing in February 1516,<sup>2</sup> to Erasmus, More says that Pace is away on an embassy: and thus, missing both Pace and Erasmus, he has "lost both parts of himself." How fully he returned this affection Pace showed in his book, De Fructu qui

<sup>1</sup> Brewer, vol. iv., preface p. liv.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. ii. 1552. Cf. also Erasm. Epp. 1097. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii.)

ex Doctrinā Percipitur,<sup>1</sup> which contains one of the earliest public recognitions of More's remarkable genius. "His ability in the rapid understanding of Greek," he says, "may be part, perhaps, of the art of any grammarian; but he has far more than this,—genius; for his ability is something more than human."

More's friendship with Fisher, confirmed and hallowed at the last by suffering, was begun in earlier and happier years, when many a jest passed between them.<sup>2</sup> Among More's younger friends Lupset and Pole claim a word of notice. The former, a pupil of Colet and friend of Erasmus, was a welcome guest at Chelsea.<sup>3</sup> By him the second edition of the Utopia, a reprint of the first, was brought out at Paris in 1517.<sup>4</sup> Through him we find More corresponding with Budaeus.<sup>5</sup> On no one do More's talents and virtues seem to have made a greater impression than on Reginald Pole. When More was ill on one occasion, Pole, then at Oxford with John Clement, sent him the opinions of the most learned physicians in the University, and wrote to his mother, the proud Countess of Salisbury, to make up the prescription.<sup>6</sup> Sir Thomas acknowledged the courtesy in a cordial letter.<sup>7</sup>

Pole was deeply impressed by the beauty of More's character, and it was his indignation at his friend's

<sup>1</sup> Basil : 1517, p. 82.

<sup>2</sup> Stapleton prints two letters between them; c. v. p. 200. See also Brewer, ii. 3418.

<sup>3</sup> Erasm. Epp. viii. 15.

<sup>4</sup> Brewer, ii. 1162. <sup>5</sup> Bud. Epp. 9. Brewer, ii. 4421.

<sup>6</sup> Life of Pole (2nd edit. 1767), p. 67.

<sup>7</sup> Stapleton, cap v. p. 198; Cres. More, p. 69.

murder which cut off all hope of his restoration to the favour of Henry VIII.<sup>1</sup> To him Ellis Heywood in 1556 dedicated his commemorative study Il Moro.<sup>2</sup>

More's friendships were not confined to English scholars. On his first embassy More made the acquaintance of Jerome Busleiden (Buslidius) and Peter Giles (Petrus Aegidius). The former was a very rich and hospitable scholar of Mechlin, founder of the college of the Three Languages at Louvain. Of him More wrote to Erasmus<sup>3</sup>—"Among other things which delighted me much in my embassy, not the least is that I made the acquaintance of Busleiden, who entertained me most courteously according to his great wealth and exceeding good nature. The elegance of his house, his admirable domestic arrangements, the monuments of antiquity which he possesses, wherein you know I take great delight, and lastly his splendid library and the fund of learning and eloquence which he possesses in himself, completely astonished me." To this subject he constantly returned, especially in his Epigrams, where there are several poems complimenting Buslidius on his coins, his medals, and his beautiful house, and begging him to publish his own Latin verses. With Petrus Aegidius, who was a magistrate of Antwerp and had been a pupil of Erasmus,<sup>4</sup> More seems to have been equally

<sup>1</sup> See Pole's treatise De Unitate Ecclesiae, lib. i. p. 21.

<sup>2</sup> Il Moro: especially Dedication, p. 7.

<sup>3</sup> Stapleton, cap. v. p. 208.

<sup>4</sup> Rudhart, Thomae Morus, p. 153.

pleased ; he was admitted, with Buslidius, as it were behind the scenes of the Utopia ; the introductory epistle was addressed to him, and the most elaborate scheme of mystification concerning "Raphael Hythlodaeus" was concocted between them.<sup>1</sup> The text of the book itself contains a high eulogium upon him, as a politician and as a friend.<sup>2</sup> Guillaume Budé (Budaeus) was another of the foreign scholars with whom the publication of the Utopia made More intimate. The French writer contributed a laudatory preface to Lupset's Paris edition of 1518. His works then came into the hand of More. On this a correspondence began which lasted during the next fifteen years, and they met once, when in attendance on Henry VIII. and Francis I. respectively. Writing in September 1518,<sup>3</sup> Budaeus thanks More for the gift of a pair of English greyhounds. He is still more pleased, he declares, with his letter, and says that More's name should be changed to Oxymorus. More replied in equally complimentary style.<sup>4</sup> To Budaeus, Erasmus wrote one of his long descriptions of More's academy, from which extracts have already been given.<sup>5</sup> In it he contrasted with shrewd humour the pains of a student's life as described by the French scholar, with its pleasures as expressed by More. "Budaeus complains that he has brought a scandal upon learning because it has entailed upon him two evils—ill health and ill husbandry. More, on the other hand, produces

<sup>1</sup> Utopia, pp. 21—26 : 163—66.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 28.

<sup>3</sup> Bud. Epp. 9.

<sup>4</sup> Stapleton, cap. v. p. 204.

<sup>5</sup> Erasm. Epp. xvii. 62.

the opposite impression. He says that his health is the better for study—that he has more influence with the King—more popularity at home and abroad—is more pleasant and useful to his friends and relations—abler for the business of life generally—and more thankful to Heaven."

Buslidius, Ægidius, and Budaeus knew only by repute of More's beautiful home life, but there were many others who had seen it. Polydore Vergil, Vives, and Antonio Bonvisi<sup>1</sup> may be considered as naturalized Englishmen; but Hans Holbein from his first arrival in England was the guest of More. He came introduced by warm commendations from Erasmus, and was already known to More not only by his widespread fame, but by his illustrations to Froben's exquisite edition of the Utopia. The connexion between the English scholar and the German painter is too interesting to be passed by without a word of notice. Holbein had shown by the skill with which he interpreted and expressed the ideas of Erasmus in the Encomium Moriae that he had a quick appreciation of literature in addition to his technical power. He was known already as the first artist of the age, and his skill was at the command of Froben. He was obviously the fit man to illustrate Utopia, and his work for the Basle edition has undoubtedly great merit. It lacks, however, the appropriateness of his Encomium Moriae; and, admirable as are the headpieces and initial letters, it is difficult to see, for instance, the object of a title-page representing Lucretia plunging a dagger into her bosom with Tarquin looking on, in fashion rather humorous than solemn.<sup>1</sup> The chart of the happy island is, however, admirable. Utopia stands in the midst of tempestuous seas, and is itself of a marvellously uneven surface. Three groups of houses are indicated, over each of which hangs a label from the clouds, Amauroti urbs, Ostium anydri, Fons anydri. In the foreground, on the main-land, stands Hythlodaye in mariner's boots, "his sea-gown girt about him," conversing with a learned doctor, and enforcing his remarks by much gesticulation. More was much pleased with the illustrations, and from this time frequent mention of Holbein occurs in his correspondence with Erasmus. The edition of the Epigrams which Froben brought out in 1520, has an elaborate title-page and tail-piece, as well as some rich initial letters from his hand. Porsenna interrogates Martius Scaevola, and putti like the bacchanals of Michelangelo blow trumpets and frisk upon the greensward above.

<sup>1</sup> For the connexion of these men with More, see Erasm. Epp. App. 326 (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2), p. 888; Vives, opera, vii. 180. Roper: More's Works, passim. Antonio Bonvisi was godfather to one of his grandsons (Augustine, son of John More). See Book of Hours, formerly in possession of Baron von Druffel. He was a staunch friend to More till his death.

A few years later the painter was advised to visit England, and in 1525, Erasmus wrote letters to bespeak a welcome for him. More, replying from the royal palace at Greenwich (December 18, 1525), says—"Thy painter is a wonderful artist, but

<sup>1</sup> There is no explanation why Tarquin should be there at all.

I fear he will not find England as productive as he hopes, although I will do the best, as far as I am concerned, that he should not find it altogether barren.”<sup>1</sup> Holbein left Basle in the autumn of 1526, and we hear of him in England in 1527. Whether he was immediately or for the whole of his sojourn the guest of More is uncertain, but he undoubtedly spent a long time at Chelsea.<sup>2</sup> He was thus at once introduced at Court, and soon found plenty of work. One of his first pictures seems to be the portrait of More, dated MDXXVII. It is life-size, half-length, and the face and expression are depicted with the intense reality characteristic of Holbein’s best work.<sup>3</sup> Two drawings in the Windsor collection are, in their way, equally admirable. They may have been sketches for the known portrait, or—as is more probable, since they are of the same size and style as those of his father, his son, and two of his daughters—studies for the large picture of the More family which is now known only through the original sketch and a number of later copies. It was probably in the same year (1527) that Holbein at least began the picture.

The Baroness Burdett Coutts possesses an extremely striking portrait, which is not dated. It is probably not Holbein’s work, but in details of pose and costume—the furred cape, hat and collar of S.S.—it resembles the other portraits. The face,

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 336. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.)

<sup>2</sup> Vide North Brit. Review, vol. xxx. p. 102 et seq.

<sup>3</sup> It is now the property of Mr. Edward Huth.

ELIZABETH DANCY
(DAUGHTER OF SIR THOMAS MORE)

however, is thinner and older than the Windsor drawings, and much darker in tone. It is unquestionably an original portrait, and is worthy of much more attention than it seems to have received from biographers.

A number of small portraits are to be found in English country houses,<sup>1</sup> most of them copies taken when More's martyrdom had made him greatly venerated. The great picture of the More family seems to be irreparably lost; but the authenticity of the sketch preserved in the Musée at Basle is unquestionable. This is undoubtedly the original design for the picture sent by More to Erasmus on Holbein's return to Basle, and acknowledged by him in the letter to Margaret Roper mentioned above. In this sketch More is seated in the middle, having his father on his right hand, and his son on his left. Behind him stands Anne Cresacre, further to his right Margaret Giggs holding an open book, and Elizabeth Dauncey drawing on a glove. Behind young John More stands Harris—or, as some say, Pattison; to More's left Cicely Heron and Margaret Roper, while slightly behind them Dame Alice, a portly woman, kneels before a prie-dieu, and is distracted in her devotion by a monkey. How far the sketch was reproduced in the picture is impossible to say; but it is probable from some of the manuscript notes on the drawing that Holbein intended to vary the details; and the known copies present such variations.

<sup>1</sup> One of the most interesting is in the possession of T. H. Cheatle, Esq., of Burford. In this the face is smaller, sharper, and more swarthy than in the better known works.

Two of the pictures demand special notice. Lord St. Oswald at Nostell Priory possesses a large copy, certainly taken in the sixteenth century, which gives probably the truest reproduction of the original that now exists.

In this the family are grouped in a circle. In the middle is Sir Thomas More in a dark furred gown with a dog lying at his feet. His face is sad and slim and darkly shadowed, unlike the larger, clearer, and happier countenance of the brighter of the Windsor drawings. To his right sits his father in his red justice's robes—a hale and hearty old man, with a red and shining face. At his feet, too, lies a little dog. Next to Sir John is Sir Thomas's daughter, Elizabeth Dauncey, standing, and drawing on a glove; by her side, at the extreme left of the picture, is Margaret Giggs, the wife of John Clement, holding a book. There are sketches for both of these in the Windsor collection, erroneously entitled Lady Berkeley and Mother Jak. The pose and dress of Mrs. Clement differ in the picture from the drawing. Behind this group is a table with books, and a sideboard with tall grasses in a bowl, and a lute and flowers. Over More's head hangs a clock with long weights. By his right shoulder and behind him and his father stands Anne Cresacre, the betrothed of his son John, who stands also behind him, on his left, a delicate-looking lad reading a book. Sitting next to Sir Thomas is his daughter, Cecilia Heron, with a book, and by her side her sister Margaret Roper with the Oedipus of Seneca open on her lap. At the extreme right is Lady More, a comfortable but rather ugly-looking woman, seated in an arm-chair, a monkey plucking at her gown. Behind Lady More is a window with flowers and oranges on the sill. John Harris stands behind with papers, and by him Henry Pattison the fool—while in the far background a secretary sits writing in an inner room by a window. All the family wear dark clothes, except Sir John, who is in bright red. The servants are in yellow, and have their hats on. It will be seen that there are considerable differences in this picture from the Basle sketch; but we cannot tell if these were to be found in Holbein's own picture. The Nostell work, interesting as it is, is not a complete guide to its original; and it has suffered severely from the attention of restorers.

The second picture referred to is of note because it has received several additions since it was first painted, and because it is in a much better condition than the Nostell picture. It was at one time at Burford Priory, when that house belonged to the Lenthalls.<sup>1</sup> It is now at Cokethorpe Park near Witney. The general scheme of the picture is the same as the Basle drawing and the Nostell copy; but Sir John More is at the extreme left of the picture. He is dressed in his judge's robes, and his face is less fat and altogether much more intelligent and interesting than in the Nostell picture, though the drawing is not nearly so striking as in the Windsor sketch. The face of Sir Thomas, too, is far more characteristic and expressive than in the Nostell picture. It is extremely pale and sad, but full of determination and power. At each side, behind, stand Anne Cresacre in dark green, and John More in black. These closely follow the Nostell picture. Next to her brother sits Cicely Heron, and by her side Margaret Roper, the latter a very pleasing presentment of a kindly and intelligent face. Behind the two seated sisters—a variation from the drawing and from the Nostell picture—stands Elizabeth Dauncey. Her attitude is the same as in the other copy; but her position is changed from the left to the right of the picture. From this point it appears that what originally occupied the right of the picture—probably the figures of Lady More and of the attendants—has been painted out, as the space is now occupied by later representatives of the More family, a man with a high colour wearing a sugar-loaf hat, and an elderly woman, both seated, and behind them a handsome man of middle age, and a boy just growing into manhood. These may probably be identified, by an inscription at the extreme right of the picture, and by the coats of arms that are painted above them, as Thomas More (son of John More and Anne Cresacre), his wife Mary Scrope, and their eldest and youngest sons, John and Christopher Cresacre. On the wall behind hangs the portrait of a lady, who may possibly be Anne More, only daughter of John More and Anne Cresacre, or Anne Cresacre herself. The additional figures appear to have been painted in 1593 "anno regni Elizabethae 35," when Thomas More was sixty-two and his wife was fifty-nine. The dates of the original family group imply that the original picture was being painted in 1530. It may thus have been an early copy of Holbein's great picture, or even a replica from the master's hand. It is in every way superior to the Nostell picture, and is by no means unworthy of the great artist.<sup>1</sup> The interest of the added figures is considerable, not least since the dark thoughtful youth who stands between his father and mother can be identified as the Cresacre More who wrote the beautiful biography of his great-grandfather.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Hunter, Preface to Cres. More's Life, p. xxxviii, note, thinks "it probably came from More Place, when the Mores abandoned their estates in Hertfordshire, and returned to the north."

Though it is impossible to be satisfied with the pictures we have, we may at least learn from them how truly Holbein entered into the beautiful family life of which he was for a time a sharer. A man he was worthy to be admitted and to appreciate—"a grave man," as Mr. Ruskin says, "knowing what steps of men keep truest time to the chanting of death," and hearing it may be the soft singing which images the truthfulness of a beautiful life "perhaps ever low in the room of that family of Sir Thomas More, or mingling with the hum of bees in the meadows outside the towered wall of Basle, or making the words of that book more tuneable, which meditative Erasmus looks upon." A fit man truly to paint Erasmus and More, the scholar and the saint.

<sup>1</sup> The picture is of great historical and genealogical interest. The identification of the persons added to the Holbein picture is rendered practically certain by the discovery of the Book of Hours belonging to the family, which was sold with the collection of the Baron von Druffel of Munster, Westphalia, in January 1894. The dates of the ages of the three figures, Thomas, John and Cresacre, as given on the picture, tally exactly with the family entries in the book. The writer of the entries is evidently the Thomas More of the picture. He refers to his brother-in-law "Mr. Raufe Scrope."

Holbein returned to Basle in 1528, and when he next visited England in 1531, probably did not reside at Chelsea.

More's house was not only a home for artists and scholars. Diplomatists and men of action eagerly sought his society, among them the Venetian ambassador Giustiniani, and his secretary Nicolo Sagudino. In 1517, especially, they were constant guests at Chelsea. Their literary society, says the former—containing probably, Pace, Tunstal, Ammonius, Linacre, and More—exerted itself strenuously, "ne dies ullus musis vacuus dilabatur," lest any day should pass without literature.<sup>1</sup> Sagudino seems to have been admitted to a close friendship with More, for he writes, "totum me ei addixi; in cuius mellitissima consuetudine tanquam in amoenissimo diversorio saepe acquiescere soleo; illeque qua est humanitate vir, perbenigne amanterque me vidit et exceptit; quo fit ut nunquam eum convenientiam quin me doctiorem suique amantiorem dimittat."<sup>2</sup> Many more of the distinguished men of the day might here take their places among More's friends; but enough has been said to show the deep impression which the beauty of his family life made upon his contemporaries.

Yet there is one other figure, most significant and

<sup>1</sup> Rawdon Brown, Giust. ii. 68.

<sup>2</sup> To Marcus Musurus, April 22, 1517.

most sinister, constantly at one period to be seen at Chelsea, which must not be forgotten. Of the familiar intercourse between Henry VIII. and his faithful servant, the words of Roper give the best picture. "So from time to time was he by the Prince advanced, continuing in his singular favour and trusty service twenty years and above. A good part whereof used the King upon holidays, when he had done his own devotions, to send for him into his travers, and there some time in matters of Astronomy, Geometry, Divinity, and such other Faculties, and some time in his worldly affairs, to sit and confer with him: and otherwise would he in the night have him up into the leads there to consider with him the diversities, courses, motions, and operations of the stars and planets. And because he was of a pleasant disposition, it pleased the King and Queen after the council had supped, at the time of their supper for their pleasure commonly to call for him, and to be merry with him. When he perceived so much in his talk to delight that he could not once in a month get leave to go home to his wife and children (whose company he most desired), and to be absent from the Court two days together, but that he should be thither sent for again, he much misliking this restraint of liberty, began thereupon somewhat to dissemble his nature, and so by little and little from his former mirth to disuse himself, that he was of them from thenceforth no more so ordinarily sent for." And, yet later on, "for the pleasure he took in his company would his grace suddenly sometimes come home to his house at Chelsea, to be merry with him, whither on a time unlooked for he came to dinner, and after dinner in a fair garden of his walked with him by the space of an hour, holding his arm about his neck. As soon as his grace was gone, I rejoicing, told Sir Thomas More how happy he was whom the King so familiarly entertained, as I had never seen him do to any before, except Cardinal Wolsey, whom I saw his grace once walk with arm-in-arm. ‘I thank our Lord, son,’ quoth he, ‘I find his grace my very good lord indeed, and I do believe he doth as singularly favour me as any subject within this realm. Howbeit, son Roper, I may tell thee, I have no cause to be proud thereof. For if my head would win him a castle in France—for then there was war between us—it would not fail to go.’<sup>1</sup> It was this guest, hasty, eager, active, seeking into all the branches of human inquiry, who disturbed the quiet of More’s home. He was a king whom men were proud to serve, and on whose praise they seemed almost to live: one who knew how to reward, and better to appreciate, services; but one whose will was relentless and whose heart without pity. More, at least, knew well what was the value set upon his own work, and did not misunderstand the meaning of a Court life.

It was a time, as More well knew, of startling contrasts. As we read of the happy company of scholars and children in the garden at Chelsea, playing soft instruments and singing old songs, we pass in thought not unnaturally to that sad scene in the garden at Bridewell, as our great dramatist has shown it to us, when the forsaken Queen would fain for a moment disperse her sorrows with the lute :

<sup>1</sup> Roper, pp. 7, 15; cf. Harpsfield.

In sweet Music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart
Fall asleep, or, hearing, die.

CHAPTER III.

LITERARY WORK: THE 'UTOPIA.'

"We need some imaginative stimulus, some not impossible ideal which may shape vague hope, and transform it into effective desire, to carry us year after year, without disgust, through the routine-work which is so large a part of life."—WALTER PATER.

MORE will ever be remembered as a lawyer and statesman of honour and conscience, and the beauty of his home life remains a priceless record of family sanctity: but even more enduring is his fame as a man of letters. He lived at a turning-point in English literature, and he did much to guide the flowing stream into the channel which it has ever since pursued. English literature with him became romantic, keenly alive to the sentiment of the past, imaginative, practical, and pure. The characteristics of the great age of Elizabeth, which was so soon to make the little island that had long seemed to live apart from the culture of Europe to claim rank with the Italy of the Renaissance, are seen not dimly in the master touches of his work. More belonged in spirit to the future—to the England of Elizabeth, even to the England which now, centuries later, pictures the art, the beauty, and the happiness that may...

ome from fellow-work and common life. But he longed to the past as well. His intense reverence, quaintness, his absolute submission to the one gle Church of Christ, his reminiscences of Chau- erian medievalism and of the literature of Chivalry, show that he had been born when men still wrote laborious manuscripts and painted with the minute devotion of a lifetime. A scholar of the New Learning, to whom Italy had revealed all that the Florentine Academy had made the heritage of the world, a man of letters steeped in the literature of past ages and other tongues, he was yet alert with all the foresight and inquisitiveness of the seamen and the free-thinkers of his day. And thus it is that when life and learning have passed on in triumphant march far beyond the point of vantage from which his eager gaze pierced into futurity, men turn back with fresh love and curiosity to the scholar and the historian who gave them the Utopia.

More lived a busy life, but one which rarely failed to find time for books. His works were, with some short intervals, the continuous expression of his mind as thought and work and tribulation shaped it. Routine-work indeed occupied a large part of his days; from it he sought relief in religion, in scholarship, and in the stimulus of an imaginative ideal.

His literary work then may well precede the record of his public life; and we may speak first concerning his History of Richard III., his lesser Latin compositions, and the Utopia.<sup>1</sup>

For a complete list of More's Works, see Rudhart, Th. Russ., pp. 430—438.

Of the lesser Latin works the Epigrams and the Letter to the University of Oxford alone need mention here. The Epigrams are a collection of verses, on every possible variety of subject, composed at different times and in entirely different strains. They are neither much better nor much worse than similar compositions of More's contemporaries. Their merit consists in the easy adaptation to poetic uses of the colloquial Latin of the time, not in style or accuracy of scholarship—for More was by no means always careful of the rules of prosody and metrical composition. They are in fact compositions remarkable neither in their own age nor in ours. In the early part of the sixteenth century every scholar wrote Latin verses, and many gave them to the world. More, at least, showed no anxiety for the publication of his epigrams. A few of them had appeared separately, but the first collected edition was produced under the superintendence of Erasmus from the press of Froben. As the work of More, and as appearing when the Utopia had made men aware of his remarkable talents, the Epigrams were sure of a cordial reception from the learned world.

“What might have been expected,” wrote Erasmus, “if Italy had given birth to a genius so happy, if he had given himself entirely to the Muses, and if his talent had ripened into autumn’s fruit? For he was but a youth when he amused himself with these epigrams, and no more than a boy when he wrote many others.” “Progymnasmata” he called the first part of his book; and his friend, the scholar Lilly, contributed verses to the volume. It was a fellow-work, "Thomae Mori et Gulielmi Lilii solatium." Dedicated to Bilibald Pirchheimer, who was famous as a statesman and man of letters, it could hardly fail to attract immediate attention.

Stapleton, who is followed by Cresacre More,<sup>1</sup> has collected some of the extravagant commendations which the book received. From these high-pitched laudations a great deal must be subtracted; it must be remembered, for example, that More praises the poems of Budé and Busleiden as warmly as they eulogize his epigrams.

A cursory glance at the volume will suffice. Its wide scope faithfully reflects the wide interests of the age. Politics and literature, the scholar's studies and the exercises of the religious life, loyal eulogies and vers de société, all find place.

Among the political epigrams are those on the capture of Norham Castle by the Scots, and its recovery after the battle of Flodden, a sort of condemnatory epitaph on the unhappy James IV., congratulations on the capture of Tournay—in which Henry VIII. is compared to Cæsar—and two which are so important as the expression of views rare indeed at that epoch as to justify their insertion here.

Populus consentiens regnum dat et aufert:

Quicunque multis vir viris unus praeest

Hoc debet his quibus praeest,

Praeesse debet neutiquam diutius

Hi quam volent quibus praeest.

Quid impotentes principes superbunt,

Quod imperant precario?<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Stapleton, cap. ii.; Cres. More, p. 12.

<sup>2</sup> Page 53.

De Bono Rege et Populo:

Totum est unus homo regnum, idque cohaeret amore :
 Rex caput est, populus caetera membra facit.
 Rex quoque habet cives (dolet ergo perdere quemquam),
 Tot munerat partes corporis ipse sui,
 Exponit populus sese pro rege putatque
 Quilibet hunc proprii corporis esse caput.<sup>1</sup>

Among the poems on matters of personal interest there are the verses, to which some fame has been given, on More's meeting a lady whom he had loved twenty years before. Their fame has arisen from the conjecture, which it is impossible to verify but which the text of the poem renders exceedingly improbable, that the lady was the younger sister of his first wife;<sup>2</sup> and from the curious coincidence that he expresses his hope of meeting her again after another twenty years have elapsed—in the year, as it turned out, of his own death. In the same division may be placed the exquisite letter to his children,<sup>3</sup> several epigrams addressed to Busleiden, three on the New Testament of Erasmus, one on an escape from drowning, in which he seems to have felt a momentary presentiment of the manner of his death, and those relating to his controversy with Brixius.

A word may be permitted on this typical literary squabble. A French scholar named de Brie (Brixius) had written a poem called Chordigera, on the fight between the English ship Regent and the French La Cordelière in 1513. More, fired by the derision heaped on the English, wrote several epigrams, exposing the malevolence, bad faith, and vanity of the French writer. When these came to the ears of Brixius he revenged himself by an elegy, entitled Anti-Morus, pointing out all the faults in the poems of More with which he was acquainted, and commenting especially on the implied slight to Henry VII. in the Garrison gratulatorium, on the accession of Henry VIII. This poem remained for some time unpublished, but at last made its appearance at Paris in 1520. More at once wrote indignantly to Erasmus,<sup>1</sup> asking his advice, and also put forth a pasquinade in answer.<sup>2</sup> He detailed the whole occasion of the quarrel, from the burning of the Regent to the Anti-Morus, and complained of its publication at a time when England and France were in close alliance. His defence, however, of the expressions in the coronation ode on which Brixius had commented is, naturally, somewhat lame. This had hardly been published when More received a letter from Erasmus,<sup>3</sup> urging him to treat the matter with silent contempt and to suppress the version which had given offence. More felt the justice of this advice, and recalled the work from circulation. Brixius, however, did not escape without punishment, for he received a scathing letter from Erasmus,<sup>4</sup> in which the highest praises of More were joined with the most contemptuous reference to his opponent. "I have not seen many of your writings," wrote the scholar, "of More's I have read several and know them well. I think of their writer as all men who know him think;—as a man of incomparable genius, a most happy memory, a most ready elo-

<sup>1</sup> Pages 50, 51. <sup>2</sup> Vide above, p. 38. <sup>3</sup> Epigrams, p. 110.

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. xv. 16.

<sup>3</sup> Erasm. Epp. xv. 15.

<sup>2</sup> Mori Opera, p. 319.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. xiii. 33.

quence. When a boy he learnt Latin, when a young man Greek, under the ablest teachers, especially Linacre and Grocyn. In divinity he has made so much progress that he is not to be despised even by the most eminent theologians: the liberal arts too he has touched not unhappily: in philosophy he is beyond mediocrity: to say nothing of his profession of the law in which he yields to no one.”<sup>1</sup>

Among the epigrams on subjects of literary and general interest, there are several directed against women,—written indeed more bitterly than we might have imagined More could write. On the other hand, there is the description of a perfect wife, addressed to “Candidus,” which in itself would be sufficient to show that More was no woman-hater.

The vices of monks and of particular ecclesiastics are satirized in other epigrams: several painters and poetasters are also derided. A French writer is told that “he is undoubtedly animated by the spirit of the ancients, for he hits upon the self-same lines that have been composed by them.” Two smart pieces describe the extravagances of the topers “Fuscus” and “Marcellus.” Another tells how More had agreed to write an epitaph on a singer named Henry Abyngdon. His first composition, written in elegiacs, was not “tuneful” enough for the bereaved relations; he then wrote another in the rhyming style of the medieval Latinists, which was much preferred to his first. On this he wrote an epigram declaring that he who considered the second superior to the first ought to be buried in the same tomb, and bear the same epitaph as Abyngdon now had.

<sup>1</sup> For the disputes with Brixius, in addition to the ordinary biographers, see Cayley, Memorials of Sir Thomas More, p. 79.

His derision of the Frenchified fashions of the day may be compared with the passage in Shakespeare's Henry VIII. on the same subject. More ridicules his friend "Lalus," who has imitated the French in his outward attire, cloak, hat, belt, sword, gloves, and—still more—

"One only man he keeps, and he from France,
Who by the French themselves could not, I think,
Be treated more in fashion of the French.
He never pays his wages,—that is French.
Stints him with meagre victuals,—French again ;
Works him to death,—and this again is French."<sup>1</sup>

Finally, there are several epigrams against astrology and astrologers, evidently one of More's pet subjects of aversion. As a specimen of the style of these compositions one, addressed In Fabianum Astrologum, may be quoted—

"Uno multa die de rebus fata futuris
Credula quum de te turba frequenter emat,
Inter multa unum si fors mendacia verum est,
    Illico vis vatem te, Fabiane, putem.
At tu de rebus semper mentire futuris :
    Si potes hoe, vatem te, Fabiane, putem."

Not the least striking of his epigrams are those in which he scourges the vices of the clergy. He shows certainly no reluctance to expose private vices or to condemn public errors. "Candidus" is spoken of as endowed with a combination of virtues rare among the fathers of the Church.

<sup>1</sup> Archdeacon Wrangham's translation, quoted in Philomorus (1st edit. 1848 ; 2nd, 1879) : q. v. for an excellent account of More's Latin poems.

As a faithful mirror view it,
Showing what to do,—what shun.
All he shuns, take care to do it :
All he does, take care to shun.<sup>1</sup>

He can see humour in sacred matters too, and objects of satire in lazy friars and worldly priests. Nowhere are More's candour and freedom better seen than in his epigrams.

While his Latin verse represents one side of the interests of this English disciple of the Renaissance—the application of the ancient languages and the classic models to the events of the day—another aspect is illustrated by his famous defence of the study of Greek, a letter addressed to the University of Oxford. This was a composition to which he seems to have attached some value, for we are told by Stapleton that he gave it to his “school,” as he called his family, to put into English and then again to translate into Latin. The cause of the letter was the commotion which had been taking place in Oxford ever since Grocyn first lectured, but which had much increased in the year 1518. The study of Greek was regarded by the older men as useless and dangerous; and the students had formed bands of “Trojans” and “Greeks.” In Lent a foolish preacher had delivered a violent diatribe against the classics. The Court heard of the commotion. Henry was at the time at Abingdon, whither he had fled from London on account of the sweating sickness. More was with him, and wrote an indignant but respectful letter to the "Fathers and Proctors" of the University.<sup>1</sup> He described the struggle, which he had at first regarded as a mere childish freak, and commented severely on the folly of the preacher who had attacked the study of Greek from the University pulpit. "What will be thought of our University abroad?" he exclaimed; and, after an eloquent, if narrow, panegyric of the great poets, historians, and orators of Greece, he insisted on the necessity of a liberal education as the basis for a study of Theology. He contrasted the activity of Cambridge with the apathy of Oxford; brought forward the examples of Warham, Wolsey—"literarum promotor, et ipse literatissimus"—and the King himself, as diligent students; and earnestly exhorted the authorities to put down the ridiculous squabble.

<sup>1</sup> Philomorus, 2nd edit. p. 126.

The letter is valuable as an illustration of the liberality of More's views and of his deep interest in his University. It was successful: "the King," says Erasmus, "imposed silence on the rabble." Nor was More's intervention ill received in Oxford, for we find him High Steward of the University in 1524.

To the end of his life he retained his interest in his University. In 1529, Wolsey proposed that he should arbitrate between the University and the Town in one of their perennial quarrels; but the citizens would not agree then to settle the dispute.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Jortin's Erasmus, iii. 358: Hearne's edition of Roper, pp. 159—167. The letter was republished, Oxford, 1633.

<sup>2</sup> See Maxwell Lyte, History of University of Oxford, p. 429.

In 1530, he joined with Gardiner in pleading for the maintenance of Wolsey's noble foundation of Cardinal College.<sup>1</sup>

But More was not only a satirist and a scholar; he had already begun to write vigorous English prose. In the year 1513, "being at the time undersheriff of London," he wrote his History of Richard III.<sup>2</sup> The work was unfinished, whether from disinclination to the kind of writing or from the increase of business does not appear. Not only was it unfinished, but it was neglected and forgotten, and did not see the light until 1543, when it appeared in Grafton's continuation of Hardyngh's City Chronicle. It at once took its place as the standard account of the period of which it treated, and was reprinted by Hall, Holinshed, and Stow. In the original publication, however, it had been edited carelessly or garbled intentionally, and in the collected edition of More's English Works, in 1557, Rastell gave, for the first time, the true copy from his uncle's manuscript.

Only in title and in intention is the work a history of Richard III, and even without the express declaration of Rastell it would have been evident that it was incomplete. To go no further, the second page of the history shows its aim: "this Duke's (Gloucester) demeanour ministreth in effect all the whole matter whereof this book shall entreat."<sup>3</sup> As printed by Rastell, it stops abruptly just after the murder of the princes. Incomplete as it is, it is a work of the highest value; and this not only as an authority, for in style and method it far surpasses any previous history written in English. A question, however, arises as to the part More took in its composition. May it not have been in reality the work of Cardinal Morton,<sup>1</sup> whether in design or in execution? Or again, was its original form the English of Rastell's edition of 1557, or the Latin of the Louvain edition of 1566? Though Morton must almost certainly have been the authority from whom most of the minute information was obtained, there can be little doubt that the history as published by Rastell was written by More. Nor is there any reason to suppose that the Latin version was the composition of Morton. The one, however, is not a translation of the other, and Mr. Gairdner's conclusion is, that while the English history is certainly More's, there is "no very sufficient ground for rejecting the voice of tradition which ascribes the Latin version to More also."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Maxwell Lyte, History of University of Oxford, p. 482.

<sup>2</sup> English Works, p. 35.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. p. 36. Mackintosh, Life of More, p. 44, note.

So much for the authenticity of the work: what then is its value? It is undoubtedly written in somewhat of a partisan spirit; there is no pretence of that absolute balance of judgment to which modern historians lay claim.<sup>3</sup> A few statements have been shown not to be severely accurate, but the main question depends on the view of Richard, Duke of Gloucester, which is there set forth with so much force, and which has been impressed on the popular imagination ever since. Here More makes no timid utterances: the portrait, whether accurate or not, is distinct and unmistakable. The first mention of the Duke is decisive—"Richard, Duke of Gloucester, by nature their uncle, by office their protector, to their father beholden, to themselves by oath and allegiance bounden, all the bands broken that bind man and man together without any respect of God or of the world, unnaturally contrived to bereave them, not only of their dignity, but also of their lives."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Harrington, Metamorphosis of Ajax, p. 46. Mr. Clements Markham has also argued for Morton's authorship. Eng. Hist. Rev. vol. vi. p. 807.

<sup>2</sup> Letters of Richard III. and Henry VII. vol. ii. p. xviii.

<sup>3</sup> Gairdner, Early Chroniclers, p. 205.

This is hardly the place for an examination of the truth of More's view; all that need be said is that recent investigations tend more and more to confirm it. It must be remembered that the later period of the reign is never reached; and thus there is no opportunity for a judgment on the general policy of Richard as king. As far as facts are concerned, it is the steps by which he reached the throne of which More treats, and it is on Richard as a man that condemnation is passed.

In spite of all that has been said about the intentional misrepresentations of Tudor historians, the considerations of ordinary probability would lead to the conclusion that the history of a time which many of its readers could remember, could not have become so extraordinarily popular if it had not been in sentiment and substance true. Nor had a sufficient period elapsed to allow of the falsification of facts even if false theories would have been accepted. More unquestionably learnt from Morton; and there is no sufficient reason to think that Morton lied.

<sup>1</sup> Eng. Works, p. 36.

Of the literary merit of the history there cannot be the shadow of a doubt. The story is unfolded with admirable clearness, and the progress of events is followed by the reader with intense interest. The characters are drawn with remarkable precision and power, and the speeches are not the rhetorical offspring of the historian's imagination, but might well be the direct utterances of the historical characters themselves. The facts tell their own tale untrammelled by tedious moral commentary. The result is that an extraordinarily vivid picture is presented, the leading features of which are impressed upon the mind with striking and peculiar force. The characters of Richard of Glo'ster and of Jane Shore, the scenes at the deathbed of Edward IV. and in the council chamber of the Tower on the morning of Hastings' execution, are drawn with a vivid power equal to that of Macaulay. From a literary point of view a double interest is attached to this work of More, from the use made of it by Shakespeare, in whose hands its phrases are utilized with wonderful skill. The soliloquies of Richard, the dying speech of Edward IV., and the whole Hastings episode are the most prominent examples; but a minor, though no less insignificant, instance, is the use of chance references to Glo'ster's restless sleep.

The anonymous life in the Lambeth library says that More "wrote also a book of the history of Henry VII.; but either the book is smothered amongst his kinsmen, or lost by the injury of this time.”<sup>1</sup> Of such a work we have only this notice; and inquiry or conjecture on this subject have been at present unfruitful.

It is by the history of Richard III. that More’s place as a historian must be estimated. It was he unquestionably who did most to originate the historical sympathy for the Tudor dynasty which has been so striking a feature of English literature. The policy of Henry VII. may have found its justification in the material prosperity which it fostered, and men may have realized during the first year of Henry VIII. the width of the interests continental and cosmopolitan among which the land had began so freely and powerfully to move. But the last of the Plantagenets died hard: the insecurity of the first Tudor’s throne had shown it: and it needed a literary masterpiece to found the security of the new dynasty on the horrors and crimes of the last of the ancient line. More gave to English history an indelible portrait of Richard Crookback, and in giving it, his clear and incisive style taught a new school of historians to write so that all might read. With More history passed from the monastery into the market-place, and where he began, Holinshed, Cavendish, and Stow followed; and Bacon on his lines gave his masterly portrait of Henry VII.

From Richard III. to the Utopia is a far cry. We pass from the realism of historic crime to the ideal presentment of a poetic and philanthropic vision. If in his History More spoke directly to his own day, in his Utopia he spoke to the dim future. From the Humanists of the sixteenth century to the Socialists of the Victorian age readers have read and re-read it with unqualified delight.

<sup>1</sup> Wordsworth’s Ecc. Biog. ii. 49.

So much has been written on this beautiful idyll that it may well seem that no aspect of it has remained unstudied; and yet, whether in the clear dignity of the original Latin or in the quaint translation of Ralph Robinson<sup>1</sup>—itself an English classic—it is as fresh to-day as when it was first given to the enthusiastic world of scholars.

The Utopia has so generally been accepted as a political ideal of the writer's, or as a dream of the distant future, that its practical importance has been in danger of being forgotten. It is by no means in the first place a philosopher's dream, applicable to all time: it is a scheme of very practical inquiry and construction, which receives a thousandfold more force when read by the light of sixteenth-century history. It is, in fact, an earnest examination of the phenomena of More's own time, constructed mainly by the help of Plato.

<sup>1</sup> Of many good editions, perhaps the best are Mr. Robert Roberts' re-issue (1878) of Dibdin's, and Mr. Edward Arber's reprint (1869). Robinson first published his version in 1551. Of the other renderings that have appeared, Bishop Burnet's contains some trifling improvements in accuracy of translation, and Mr. Seebohm in some of the notes to his Oxford Reformers has given the exact meaning which in our time we attach to the Latin words of the original; but such alterations are, after all, but half benefits, for it is not so important to translate the sixteenth-century Latin of More with all the refinements of modern scholarship, as to understand what his meaning was as it would be understood by sixteenth-century readers. For this cause Robinson's translation is to be preferred, for its very quaintnesses, even where they do not exactly correspond to the intention of the original, have an intrinsic value which must not be overlooked.

The groundwork of the Utopia is a supposed conversation between the writer, when a guest of Petrus Ægidius, at Antwerp, and a mariner named Raphael Hythlodaye, who had sailed with the navigator Amerigo Vespucci. Hythlodaye, being left behind his companions, discovered and lived for five years in an unknown island called Utopia, and it is his account of his sojourn which More professes to have written down. The idea was a very natural one at that date. Within men's memories the barriers which seemed of old to shut in the world had all been cast down, and a limitless extent of unknown land lay before the imagination of the age. The results of the voyages of the great explorers had been so marvellous that nothing in discovery could seem too wonderful to be true. At the very time when the intellectual world was being rejuvenated by the power of the ancient literatures, its imagination was aroused and its sympathies were quickened by the revelation of a New World. What wonder then if the men who awoke to the realization of the terrible evils of the social and political organization in which they lived should fondly hope to find in the New World a society purer than their own? This longing created its own answer. The earnest thinkers of Europe yearned for the explorers to find an ideal State.

More sailed over the sea of troubles in which England was set, and discovered Utopia.

It was indeed the discovery of a new land, a revelation of beauty and righteousness to that hardened age. Instead of empty glitter and show, there was a deep and simple pleasure, so pure and yet so enticing that the most constant courtier might sigh when he thought of its contrast to his own. The great aim of the Utopia was to point out the evil of certain conditions of life, and to suggest remedies, by placing a perfectly different state before men's minds. More's book, in fact, was eminently practical: he had no pet theory or philosophic craze to establish. He endeavoured merely to declare the wrongs which the age tolerated; trusting that when they were plainly and unanswerably set forth men would have no difficulty in redressing them.

As has been already stated, the second book of the Utopia was written some months before the first, probably about November 1515, while the work was completed in the earlier months of 1516.

The work in the first edition<sup>1</sup> was prefaced by various letters and poems, complimentary and introductory. In these the fiction was maintained with solemn gravity. Apologizing for the delay which had taken place between the publication of the book and the conversation which it recorded, More, blending truth with fable, gave a very interesting account of his daily work.

<sup>1</sup> "Libellus vere aureus nec minus salutaris quam festivus, de optimo reip. statu digne una Insula Utopia." Louvain, 1516.

“ Whiles<sup>1</sup> I do daily bestow my time about law matters : some to plead, some to hear, some as arbitrator with mine award to determine, some as an umpire or judge with my sentence finally to discuss. Whiles I go one way to see and visit my friend : another way about mine own private affairs. Whiles I spend almost all the day abroad amongst other and the residue at home among mine own : I leave to myself, I mean to my book, no time. For when I am come home, I must commune with my wife, chat with my children, and talk with my servants. All the which things I reckon and account among business for as much as they must of necessity be done : and done must they needs be unless a man will be stranger in his own house. And in any wise a man must so fashion and order his conditions, and so appoint and dispose himself, that he be merry, jocund, and pleasant among them, whom either nature hath provided, or chance hath made, or he himself hath chosen, to be the fellows and companions of his life : so that with too much gentle behaviour and familiarity he do not mar them, and by too much sufferance of his servants make them his masters. Among these things now rehearsed stealeth away the day, the month, the year. And when do I write then ? And all this while have I spoken no word of sleep, neither yet of meat, which among a great number doth waste no less time than doth sleep, wherein almost half the lifetime of man creepeth away. I therefore do win and get only that time which I steal from sleep and meat."

<sup>1</sup> Utopia, Robinson's translation, p. 21.

After this passage the fiction is continued, and many little details are thrown in to complete the deception. More concludes the letter to Petrus Ægidius by a question whether after all, considering the ignorance, dullness, and perversity of many men, he is wise in publishing the record.

In the letter of Ægidius to Busleiden, also prefaced to the book itself, Hythlodaye's power of narration is very highly commended, but More's work is still more warmly praised. "I promise you," says Ægidius, "I can scarce believe that Raphael himself, by all that five years' space that he was in Utopia abiding, saw there so much as here in Master More's description is to be seen and perceived." The whole origin of the fiction is touched when Ægidius explains the absence of Utopia from the charts of the ancient geographers; perhaps its name has been changed, but "now in our time divers lands be found which to the old geographers were unknown." Numberless other instances of similar treatment might be pointed out; and there can be no wonder that when men were deceived by the Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum they should be duped by the Utopia.

The first book begins by an accurate description of More's embassy and of his introduction to Ægidius. To this succeeds a minute description of his meeting with Raphael Hythlodaye in the cathedral of Antwerp, and of their subsequent converse on a bench outside More's house. From this point the real importance of the study begins; hitherto in the prefatory letters and the introductory narrative the basis on which the work is to rest has been laid; now we are at once brought face to face with the evils which More deplored and to expose which was his main object in writing.<sup>1</sup>

While in the first book certain political and social questions of the time are discussed, and in the second the commonwealth of Utopia is described, the division between the two books is really an arbitrary one. The object of both is the same, though the end is obtained in one case by the direct reprobation of evils, and in the other generally by inference from the perfect State the constitution of which is described. To all appearance, More, after he had written the second book, saw that the nature of the fiction would prevent it containing much that he wished to declare; he therefore wrote an introductory book in which he expressed his meaning more fully. The first book, then, is so plainly the necessary complement of the second, that the evils of which More complained may be gathered indifferently from each.

We have, firstly, the objections to taking service at any Court, put into the mouth of Hythlodae.<sup>2</sup> Although More is represented as answering them, there can be no doubt that they were substantially his own views. His political life will show that it was only with great reluctance, and when he had made public these very declarations of its evils, that he had entered the royal service. Not only, then, does Hythlodaye desire no riches or honours for himself, but he has no faith in his being able to do any good for the State, by taking a position at Court. For most princes delight only in war and feats of chivalry ("the knowledge whereof I neither have nor desire"), and seek to increase their possessions by fair means or foul. Not only is submission to their will in this matter obligatory on a courtier; but the great ministers also must be obeyed and flattered. Nor is there hope of any reform; for all advice is met by a resolute determination to resist every change: the minister when asked to ameliorate distress is a consistent "laudator temporis acti." "These things, say they, pleased our forefathers and ancestors: would God we could be as wise as they were." These evils are common to all European Courts, and every reader of sixteenth-century history will be able to give instances of their truth. Hythlodaye then turns to speak especially of England. He significantly introduces his observations by saying that they were the substance of a conversation which took place in the house of Cardinal Morton, four or five months after the Cornish insurrection of 1495<sup>1</sup>; and we can perhaps hardly be wrong in inferring that it was this very revolt which first drew More's attention to the social wrongs of his time.

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

<sup>2</sup> R. Robinson's translation, p. 35.

The first of the great evils in England is the wholesale execution of thieves,<sup>2</sup> often "twenty hanged together on one gallows." This severity is useless; "much rather provision should have been made that there were some means whereby they might get their living, so that no man should be driven to this extreme necessity, first to steal and then to die." In answer to objections it is asserted that this infliction of the capital penalty submits God's ordinance to man's judgment. The sanctity of human life was declared by the Mosaic Law, by which theft was not punished with death, and we cannot think "that God in the new law of clemency and mercy" has given license to greater cruelty. And not only is the punishment in the highest sense unlawful: it is also unreasonable. The law which lays the same penalty on the murderer and the thief is an encouragement to murder.

<sup>1</sup> R. Robinson's translation, p. 36.

<sup>2</sup> Page 37 et seq.

The whole history of the English statute book is a commentary on these noble words of More. As we pursue the slow record of the gradual restriction of the extreme sentence of the law, we wonder again that a truth so clearly expressed in the sixteenth century should have been so long in winning recognition even from intelligent thinkers. Sad indeed is the satire on men's slowness to learn the simple lessons of Christianity, when we remember that a later generation was aroused not by the arguments of More, but by those of Beccaria. In the time of Henry VIII. there seemed a terrible necessity for the wholesale executions which marked his reign; and there were not wanting eminent and humane thinkers to defend them on practical grounds. England was overrun by "sturdy beggars." In the towns skilled labour was well paid, but in the country the great change in the agricultural system had led to fearful misery; men, as More said, were forced to be thieves, and the result, in the words of Latimer, was that "two acres of hemp sown up and down England would be all too little to hang the thieves in it."<sup>1</sup> More, however, is not without his own opinion as to what should be the punishment of thieves. He refers to the Roman custom of setting the criminals to work in mines, and recommends the practice of an imaginary people called the "Polylerites." This passage, in spite of a touch of what we should call insular narrowness, is an exquisite picture of an ideal society.<sup>2</sup> "Their land is both large and ample, and also well and wittily governed: and the people in all conditions free and ruled by their own laws, saving that they pay a yearly tribute to the great King of Persia. But because they be far from the sea, compassed and enclosed almost round about with high mountains, and do content themselves with the fruits of their own land, which is of itself very fruitful and fertile: for this cause neither they go to other countries nor other come to them. And according to old custom of the land they desire not to enlarge the bounds of their dominions: and those that they have by reason of the high hills be easily defended: and the tribute which they pay to their chief lord and king setteth them free from tribute. Thus their life is commodious rather than gallant, and may better be called happy or wealthy than notable or famous." Among these people thieves are compelled to restore what they have stolen, to the rightful owner—"not as they do in other lands, to the king, whom they think to have no more right to it than the thief himself hath"—and then to become bondmen. They are well treated; but a number of precautions are taken to prevent their running away or conspiring against the State. Death is the punishment of those bondmen who accept alms in money, or give money to any one, or touch alms, or cast off their distinctive badges, or talk with a bondman of another shire. More seems here to forget his own canon of the authority of the Mosaic Law; for, if it is not allowable for the English Government to take life for any crime but murder, why does he, through the mouth of Hythlodaye, praise the wisdom of the Polylerites? Cardinal Morton is at length made to join in the conversation—which had hitherto been carried on by Hythlodaye and a lawyer—and to admit that it might be allowable in England for the King to reprieve those condemned to death in order to see if their plan would succeed. And it would be equally applicable to vagabonds. Of these plans for treating thieves we can only say that they are inconsistent and inadequate. To return; other evils have been introduced as causing the great number of thieves and vagabonds. The abuse of livery is commented on in justly severe terms, and needs no special notice here. Nor need we dwell on More's condemnation of the enormous luxury of the age.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Erasmus to Henry VIII. ; Brewer, Letters and Papers, Henry VIII., iii. 220.

<sup>2</sup> Utopia, pp. 47, 48.

The agricultural distress which had followed the change of arable land into pasture, and on the raising of the rents, is pointed out with deep feeling. "Therefore that one covetous and insatiable cormorant may compass about and enclose many thousand acres of ground together within one pale or hedge, the husbandmen be thrust out of their own, or by violent oppression they be put beside it, or by wrongs and injuries they be so wearied that they be compelled to sell all: by one means, therefore, or another, either by hook or crook, they must needs depart away, poor, silly, wretched souls, men, women, husbands, wives, fatherless children, widows, woful mothers with their young babes, and their whole household, small in substance and much in number, as husbandry requireth many hands. Away they trudge, out of their known and accustomed houses, finding no place to rest in. And their household stuff, which is very little worth, though it might well abide the sale; yet, being suddenly thrust out, they be constrained to sell it for a thing of nought. And when they have wandered abroad till that be spent, what can they then else do but steal, and then, justly, pardy, be hanged or else go about a begging."<sup>1</sup> Then More put before the learned world of Europe the complaint of the poor. On all sides we meet with confirmation of his statements: Brinklow, Latimer, Starkey, deplored what Kett rashly tried to remedy.

Such are some of the evils which England suffers; and More sadly asks why Hythlodaye, as a philosopher, will not be the King's instructor, since

<sup>1</sup> Page 41.

Plato's ideal of the philosopher king seems far from fulfilment. Then we return to the reasons against Court service,<sup>1</sup> for Hythlodaye replies by a bitter description of the French foreign policy, and demands how his advice would be taken if he were to tell the French King that "it were best for him to content himself with his own kingdom of France as his fore-fathers and predecessors did before him; to make much of it, to enrich it and to make it as flourishing as he could, to endeavour himself to love his subjects and again to be beloved of them, willing to live with them, peaceably to govern them, and with other kingdoms not to meddle seeing that which he hath already is even enough for him, yea, and more than he can well turn him." Obviously, he would not be heard for a moment. It needs little sagacity to see the bearing of this passage on the politics of England under Henry VIII. Other grievances from which the people suffer are then brought forward, in a remarkable passage where More, especially glancing at the particular acts of tyranny for which Henry VII. was responsible, seems to foresee the expedients of the whole Tudor dynasty and even of the Stewarts—such as tampering with the coinage, wars feigned for the sake of exacting subsidies, the enforcement of obsolete laws, the use of the dispensing power for the sake of pecuniary profit, the bribing and coercion of the judges. "If I should rise up," he says, "and boldly affirm that all these counsels be to the king dishonour and reproach, whose honour and safety is more and rather supported and up-holden by the wealth and riches of his people than by his own treasures: and if I should declare that the commonalty chooseth the king for their own sake and not for his own sake: to the intent that by his labour and study they might all live wealthy, safe from wrongs and injuries, and that therefore the king ought to take more care for the wealth of the people than for his own wealth, even as the office and duty of a shepherd is in that he is a shepherd to feed his sheep rather than himself, what heed would they pay?" He continues in the same strain, laying down in terms that seem to belong in turn to the fourteenth and to the nineteenth century,<sup>1</sup> a theory of the duties of a king such as was rarely heard in his time. Then returning again to the main question, More says that because good advice or the highest rules of government would be unheeded at Court, a philosopher ought not to refuse his help to a king: "you must not forsake the ship in a tempest because you cannot rule and keep down the winds." Yet Hythlodaye still holds his opinion, and declares that there can be no amelioration of existing evils until the State is constituted on communistic principles. Here the arguments are marshalled with great skill, and little space is allotted to the answers to them; but the question remains, how far were these More's own opinions? It is possible that, looking at the condition of his own time, at the coarse luxury of the upper and the degradation of the lower classes, he may have conceived that redress could be obtained by a restoration of the primitive practice of Christianity, a voluntary and temporary communism. It is a question impossible to decide ; it can only be said that there is no support whatever in any other of his works to any socialistic scheme. The passage referred to runs thus—“ Howbeit<sup>1</sup> where the possessions be private, where money beareth all the stroke, it is hard and almost impossible that there the commonwealth may justly be governed and prosperously flourish. Unless you think thus—that justice is there executed where all things come into the hands of evil men, or that prosperity there flourisheth where all is divided among a few ; which few nevertheless do not lead their lives very wealthily and the residue live miserably, wretchedly, and beggarly. . . For where every man under certain titles and pretences draweth and plucketh to himself as much as he can so that a few divide among themselves all the whole riches, be there never so much abundance and store, there to the residue is left lack and poverty. And for the most part it chanceth that this latter sort is more worthy to enjoy that state of wealth than the other be : because the rich be covetous, crafty, and unprofitable. On the other part the poor be lowly, simple, and by their labour more profitable to the commonwealth than to themselves. Thus I do fully persuade myself that no equal and just distribution of things can be made, nor that perfect wealth shall ever be among men, unless this private ownership be exiled and banished. But so long as it shall continue, so long shall remain among the most and best part of men the heavy and inevitable burden of poverty and wretchedness." The communistic society, says Hythlodaye, is to be seen in the utmost prosperity in the New World.

<sup>1</sup> Page 55 et seq.

<sup>1</sup> E. g. the king is "to live of his own." We may wonder if More knew the history of this famous phrase, or thought merely of its recent use: vide Rolls of Parlt. 6 Hen. VIII. c. 24.

<sup>1</sup> Page 67.

Here the first book ends. In the second, Utopia, the communistic state, is described. So far the actual evils from which England was then suffering have been plainly set forth: now we see them rather by inference from the perfect constitution of Utopia.

There is no need to linger on the description of the island, of the method by which the inhabitants in turn spend two years in the country, of the "strange fashion in hatching and bringing up pulleyne," or other schemes which are in turn serious suggestions or simply humours to preserve the spirit of the fiction, in which there is so curious a blending of jest and earnest. The description of the typical city, Amaurote, is more tangible; and the marginal note of the translator is not needed to point out that London is always in the writer's mind. The beautiful houses with their gardens and vineyards behind; the streets twenty feet broad, with public halls at equal distances—everything clean, public, and prosperous, because all was common—are a strange contrast to the houses "made of every rude piece of timber that came first to hand, with mud walls, and ridged roofs, thatched over with straw," which "their old chronicler" described as having existed long ago in Utopia, and which the eyes of every reader of More's book saw all around, replenished

“with much uncleanness and filth, with pits, cellars and vaults lying open and uncovered, to the great peril and danger of the inhabitants.”<sup>1</sup> The work of every household is brought to the market-places whence the heads of families take whatever they need ; there is no sale or barter. There are meat markets also ; but the slaughter-houses are outside the city, and the meat is only brought within the walls when it has been thoroughly cleansed. “Neither they suffer anything that is filthy, loathsome, or unclean, to be brought into the city, lest the air by the stench thereof infected and corrupt should cause pestilent diseases.” With this one cannot but compare the accounts of the terrible sweating sickness with which the histories of the time are charged. By this fearful scourge Wolsey was several times stricken down ; and the King but narrowly escaped. In More’s own household his favourite daughter was brought to death’s door ; and his friend Ammonius died after a day’s illness. Constantly recurring during the reign, it was especially severe during the years 1516, 1517, and 1518. When in attendance on the King at Abingdon during the last year, More himself had to take precautions for the safety of the Court.<sup>2</sup>

The sickness had broken out at Oxford ; More at once sent orders to the Mayor “that the inhabitants of those houses that be and shall be infected shall keep in, put out wisps, and bear white rods,” which was the precaution that Wolsey had previously directed to be observed in London. The fearful ravages of this plague are not to be wondered at when we recall Erasmus's description of the condition of the houses and streets in his time, which gives a pathetic force of contrast to More's picture of the Utopian towns. Erasmus attributed the spreading of the sickness to "bad houses and bad ventilation, to the clay floors, the unchanged and festering rushes with which the rooms were strewn, and the putrid offal, bones, and filth which reeked and rotted together in the unswept and unwashed dining halls and chambers."<sup>1</sup> In Utopia not only was all precaution taken to preserve the public health, but the most tender care was bestowed on the sick. Heights of social benevolence are here reached which with all our vast and sympathetic organizations we can hardly be said to have yet realized. "In the circuit of the city, a little within the walls, they have four hospitals, so big, so wide, so ample and so large, that they may seem four little towns; which were devised of that bigness, partly to the intent the sick, be they never so many in number, should not lie so throng or strait, and therefore uneasily, and partly that they which were taken and holden with contagious diseases, such as be wont by infection to creep from one to another, might be laid apart, far from the company of the residue. These hospitals be so well appointed and with all things necessary to health so furnished, and moreover so diligent attendance through the continual presence of cunning physicians is given, that though no man be sent thither against his will, yet notwithstanding, there is no sick person in all the city that had not rather lie there than at home in his own house."

<sup>1</sup> 32 Henry VIII. cap. 18.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. John Clerk to Wolsey, 25 April, 1508 ; Brewer, ii. 4125.

<sup>1</sup> Brewer, pref. to vol. ii. p. ccix.

The government of Utopia is somewhat complicated; but the distinguishing feature is the responsibility of the Prince, whose office is elective, to the people, by whom he can be deposed for suspicion of tyranny.

The chapter "of sciences, crafts, and occupations" is one of the most interesting in the book, as breathing a spirit of enlightened humanity of which few traces are to be found in the history or legislation of the Tudor sovereigns, and as anticipating the conclusions to which public opinion has but gradually and recently been brought. All the Utopians, men and women, learn husbandry, besides which every one has a trade. "And the chief and almost only office of the Syphograuntes is to see and take heed that no man sit idle; but that every one apply his own craft with earnest diligence. And yet for all that not to be wearied from early in the morning till late in the evening with continual work, like labouring and toiling beasts. For this is worse than the miserable and wretched condition of bondmen, which nevertheless is almost everywhere the life of workmen and artificers saving in Utopia." There the workmen work only for six hours: yet there is no lack of "all things that be requisite either for the necessity or commodity of life." This is possible since all work, whereas in Christendom, women, priests, and rich men are generally idle, besides the many engaged in "vain and superfluous occupations." The Utopians have, however, a few citizens who are set apart and devoted to learning, and perform no handicraft. From these are chosen the 'Philarchs,' and officers of state. Finally "in the institution of that commonwealth this end is only and chiefly pretended and minded, that what time may possibly be spared from the necessary occupations and affairs of the commonwealth, all that the citizens should withdraw from the bodily service to the free liberty of the mind and garnishing of the same. For herein they suppose the felicity of their life to consist."

Over-population they avoid by migration and colonization: what one city lacks in goods another supplies. Families live together: all the sons, married or single, under the rule of the eldest of the house. It need hardly be said that in all that relates to the position of women and their relation to the children there is an entire and fundamental divergence from the famous doctrines of the Republic: natural affection is glorified, not abased. All dine in the public halls, except for urgent cause. "They begin every dinner and supper with reading something that pertains to good manners and virtue. But it is short, because no man shall be grieved therewith. Hereof the elders take occasion of honest communication, but neither sad nor unpleasant. Howbeit they do not spend all the whole dinner time themselves with long tedious talks, but they gladly hear also the young men,—yea, and purposely provoke them to talk to the intent that they may have a proof of every man's wit and towardness, or disposition to virtue, which commonly by the liberty of feature doth show and utter itself."

Such is the common life of the Utopians; cheerful, innocent, happy: and as More after writing the beautiful description of his ideal would leave the library in his "New Lodging" and walk across the soft turf to his house he may well have thought how nearly it was realized in his own family, and have forgotten, perhaps, how very exceptional were the causes required to establish such a home.

The Utopians trade in all the things of which they have a superfluity. Of the price they always give one-seventh to the poor of the country where they trade. Now, however, they no longer ask immediate payment for their goods, but leave the money in charge of the foreign magistrates, of whom they demand it in case of war. Gold and silver they consider base things, and use them for the meanest purposes. "To gold and silver Nature hath given no use that we may not well lack, if that the folly of men had not set it in higher estimation for the rareness' sake. But, of the contrary part, Nature as a most tender and loving mother hath placed the best and most necessary things open abroad; as the air, the water, and the earth itself; and hath removed and put further from us vain and unprofitable things." Here More abandons himself to his humour, and gives a picture, ludicrous enough, of the pains the Utopians take to show the low value they set on gold, silver, and precious stones; resuming his serious tone in a description of the evils of a plutoocracy.

In Utopia education is carefully considered: the inhabitants are as well instructed as we are, save that they have not our refinements of Logic. "In this place," remarks Robinson in the margin, "seemeth to be a nipping taunt." Astronomy and meteorology they have studied with success; but astrology "they never so much as dreamed of." They welcomed Hythlodaeus's somewhat peculiar selection of Greek authors with delight; and from "a certain affinity" easily learned the language.

The Utopian code of ethics is thus expounded, in a passage which seems to be chiefly based on Aristotle and Cicero, though the references to Plato are numerous. The Utopians declare that "the felicity of man" consists in pleasure: "and, which is more to be marvelled at, the defence of this so dainty and delicate an opinion they fetch even from their grave, sharp, bitter, and rigorous religion." But "they think not," says More further on, "felicity to consist in all pleasure, but only in that pleasure that is good and honest, and that here, as to perfect blessedness, our nature is allured and drawn even of virtue, whereto only they that be of the contrary opinion do attribute felicity. For they define virtue to be life ordered according to nature, and that we be hereunto ordained even of God. And that he doth follow the course of nature, who in desiring and refusing things is ruled by reason." How far this may be consistent it is not necessary here to inquire. In the exposition of the Utopian philosophy all is high and ennobling, whether the basis on which it is founded is really capable of sustaining the ideal, or not. Intellectual pleasures are regarded as the highest : virtue is pursued for the sake of a spiritual payment. Examples of the pleasures which the Utopians accepted and rejected are given. In the former passage may be noticed the Platonic idea of pleasure in motion and of the distinction between pure and mixed pleasures. In the latter any delight in fine clothes, jewels, gambling, hunting is condemned. In illustration of the Utopians' position their reprobation of fasting is referred to. This is a point which serves to remind the reader that More, throughout the book, minglest in a very subtle manner his own opinions with views to which he was entirely opposed. He himself fasted continually, and was as scrupulous in the preservation of the outward forms of religion as he was deeply penetrated by its spirit.

We now return to the social institutions of Utopia. Slavery exists in the ideal State ; but the bondmen are only those who have been guilty of heinous offences, or have been bought when condemned to death in foreign countries. To those who are afflicted with any incurable disease of a very painful nature the priests and magistrates advise suicide, “ but they cause none such to die against his will.”

The Utopians alone “ of the nations in that part of the world be content every man with one wife apiece.”

Their rulers have no pomp of office; only the prince has a sheaf of corn borne before him, and the bishop a waxen taper.

Their laws are few and simple, and the whole race of lawyers "they utterly exclude and banish."

The subject of their foreign relations is made the occasion for bitterly ironical reference, both direct and implied, to the politics of the day. They make no leagues, and that "chiefly because that in those parts of the world leagues between princes be wont to be kept and observed very slenderly. For here in Europe, and especially in those parts where the faith and religion of Christ reigneth, the majesty of leagues is everywhere considered holy and inviolable: partly through the justice and goodness of princes, and partly at the reverence and motion of the head bishops. Which, like as they make not promises themselves but they do very religiously perform the same, so they exhort all princes in any wise to abide by their promises, and them that refuse or deny so to do, by their pontifical power and authority they compel thereto. And surely they think well that it might seem a very reproachful thing, if in the leagues of them which by a peculiar name be called faithful, faith should have no place."

"But in that new found part of the world, which is scarcely so far from us beyond the line equinoctial as our life and manners be dissident from theirs, no trust nor confidence is in leagues. But the more and holier ceremonies the league is knit up with, the sooner it is broken by some cavillation found in the words, which many times of purpose be so craftily put in and placed that the bands can never be so sure nor so strong but they will find some hole open to creep out at, and to break both league and truth. The which crafty dealing, yea the which fraud and deceit, if they should know it to be practised among private men in their bargains and contracts, they would incontinent cry out at it with an open mouth and a sour countenance as an offence most detestable and worthy to be punished with a shameful death,—yea, even very they that avaunce themselves authors of like counsel given to princes. Wherefore it may well be thought, either that all justice is a base and low virtue and which availeth itself" (subsidat, original) "far under the high dignity of kings; or at the leastwise that there be two justices; the one meet for the inferior sort of the people, going afoot and creeping low by the ground, and bound down on every side with many bands because it shall not run at rovers; the other a princely virtue, which, like as it is of much higher majesty than the other poor justices, so also it is of much more liberty, as to the which nothing is unlawful that it lusteth after."

There could be no clearer reprobation of any difference between political and individual morality. The reference to the events of the European history of the last twenty years was one which he who ran might read. Every line, almost every word contains a sting: and yet there was nothing that authority could reprehend. As Mr. Seebolm puts it—"Upon any other hypothesis than that the evils against which its satire was directed were admitted to be real, the romance of Utopia must also be admitted to be harmless. To pronounce it to be dangerous was to admit its truth."

The Utopians abhor war, and fight only in defence of their own country, or to defend some oppressed nation. They fight also, by preference, with cunning, to avoid bloodshed. They offer large bribes for the assassination of the chiefs of their adversaries, and for treason among their enemies. Here again the inference was obvious. If these actions seemed a detestable contrast to the lofty morality of the Utopians, much more was it a dishonour to a Christian Government to engage in such intrigues as at that very time Henry VIII. was carrying on in Scotland. An equally severe condemnation is implied in the reference to the Utopians' employment of mercenaries. It could have needed no acute intelligence to recognize the Swiss—whom the King was then employing—in the Zapoletes, "dwelling in wild woods and high mountains," who basely hire themselves to the highest bidder, and whom it would be well if war had utterly destroyed.

Lastly we reach the most interesting chapter in the whole book—"Of the religions in Utopia." Of this the barest notice must suffice.

There are several religions in the happy island, but Christianity has been introduced and has made many converts. By an ancient law of King Utopus, who believed that if one religion was absolutely true it must eventually prevail, there is perfect liberty for every man to hold what views he will. This complete toleration excludes only him who does not believe the immortality of the soul; because he lowers the dignity of humanity to the level of the beasts. He is excluded from all public office, but undergoes no punishment, "because," says More, with the great saying of Cassiodorus in his mind, no doubt, "they be persuaded that it is not in any man's power to believe what he list." He is not, however, allowed to propagate his opinions.

The Utopians do not mourn for the dead,—save for those who seem to depart against their will. They honour them by memorials recording their virtues, and believe in their continual, though invisible, presence. Soothsaying and divination they reject, but they are firmly persuaded of the truth of miracles.

There are two kinds of religious orders among them: men who take upon themselves all hard, vile, unpleasant labours, and perform every kind of spiritual and manual work, yet "neither reprove other men's lives, nor glory in their own"; some of whom are vegetarians, ascetic, and celibate, while others marry and enjoy all pleasures which do not hinder their labour. "They have priests of exceeding holiness, and therefore very few." These have power to excommunicate, and are the instructors of children. There are women-priests,—though few, and those widows, and old. The male priests marry. "To no office among the Utopians is more honour and pre-eminence given. Insomuch that if they commit any crime they be under no common judgment, but be left only to God and themselves. For they think it not lawful to touch him with man's hand, be he never so vicious, which after so singular a sort was dedicate and consecrate to God, as a holy offering."

In the churches there is a dim religious light, conducive to concentration of thought and devotion of soul. Though there are many sects, "nothing is seen or heard in the churches but that seemeth to agree indifferently with them all." The sacrifices of the sects are private, but all attend the public services. There is no image of God in the church, "to the intent it may be free for every man to conceive God by their religion after what likeness and similitude they will."

The wives and children always confess at home to the head of the family, before the sacrifice. The offering is not of any living thing, but "they burn frankincense and other sweet savours, and light also a great number of wax candles and tapers, not supposing this to be anything available to the divine nature, as neither the prayers of men; but this unhurtful and harmless kind of worship pleaseth them. And by these sweet savours and lights and other such ceremonies men feel themselves secretly lifted up and encouraged to devotion with more willing and fervent hearts."

The vestments of the priests are embroidered with birds' feathers, and have a solemn signification. At the beginning of the service praises are sung to an exquisitely harmonious accompaniment of various instruments. Afterwards priests and people pray, in words which every one can apply to himself. God is adored as Creator and Governor, and is implored to show the right way of life, the best government, and the true religion,—that if the people do not possess these they may be led to the knowledge of them—and He is asked to take His servants to Himself when He will.

When the service is over, the rest of the day is spent in “play and exercises of chivalry.”

No part of the Utopia has been more often the subject of commentary than this; and certain modern writers have discovered in it many of their own opinions. This may be more fitly discussed when More’s religious writings are examined. But such points are of importance in the discussion of the question which every reader of the Utopia must desire to solve,—how far the views of More are expressed in his book. In the condemnation of the political and social evils of the day there can be no doubt that he was speaking his own opinions through a safe disguise; but more than this we can hardly with any certainty declare. It may be that, eminent lawyer though he was, he felt deeply the injuries of the law’s delay; but his other writings almost necessarily forbid us to think that he seriously advocated communism. The arguments against it which he gives, though slight, are conclusive; and we may infer that he rather looked for an equality in the future by the influence of Christianity and the true recognition of its humanizing spirit.<sup>1</sup> Nor again can the voluntary suicide

<sup>1</sup> Utopia, p. 144—“Howbeit I think this was no small help and furtherance in the matter that they heard us say, that Christ instituted among his all things common: and that of the incurable be supposed to be sanctioned by More himself. The plain opposition between his own custom and the Utopian opinion of fasting has already been pointed out. A similar divergence is evident on the subject of images or pictures in churches, which he expressly defends in one of his more serious works. Nor can we believe that More would for a moment have tolerated women as priests, or indeed have suffered the marriage of the clergy: of the latter at least there is no sanction in any other of his writings. His own words at the end of the book confirm this view: many things, he says, in the manners and laws of Utopia seemed to him "to be instituted and founded of no good reason."

Was the Utopia a lamentation for the Middle Ages which the Renaissance was everywhere burying, not without contempt? Was it a passionate prophecy of the dim future which More's keen insight fore-saw? No doubt it was in some measure at least a regret for the past. The old system of mutual help, the old relations of society, its feudally patriarchal obligations, and its ties of fraternity and guild, were certainly to him very beautiful, and he witnessed their destruction with something like dismay. But for much of the past he had no reverence and no regret. Wars and the delights of a half-barbarous age had no charm in his eyes. "Hunting and hawking are no longer the choice pleasures of knight the same community doth yet remain among the rightest Christian companies."

---

and lady, but are jeered at by him as foolish and unreasonable pieces of butchery ; his pleasures are in the main the reasonable ones of learning and music.”<sup>1</sup>

That his book was a prophecy of the future, or even the full expression of his own idea for England, it would be difficult to show. It has become, we are told, in our own day, “a necessary part of a Socialist’s library,”<sup>2</sup> but it conflicts with much of the authorized socialist programme.<sup>3</sup> It is rather wide in its scope than definite in its intentions, save only in its direct references to the pressing evils of the day. And its indebtedness to the past is general rather than particular. More “is penetrated with the spirit of Plato, and quotes or adapts many thoughts both from the Republic and the Timaeus.”<sup>4</sup> But the ideal is still modern, practical, and Christian, and its application is permanent. More looks everywhere to common effort for the redress of wrongs, and to an underlying equality, which yet suffers kings and serfs, priests and officers, to reconcile the wrongs of an age of selfish struggles. He has no toleration for the iniquities of man against man, for luxury and chicanery and oppression, but his remedies are wrapt in an intentional obscurity and exaggeration.

<sup>1</sup> William Morris, Forewords to Utopia : Kelmscott Press, 1893.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. : Mr. Morris’s beautiful edition which every one would like to possess, but only the very rich can afford to buy.

<sup>3</sup> The instances Mr. Morris gives are those relating to government, the priesthood, and the obligation of the marriage contract, and in the “atmosphere of asceticism, which has a curiously blended savour of Cato the Censor and a mediæval monk.” Ibid.

<sup>4</sup> Jowett, Introduction to the Republic, Dialogues of Plato, 3rd edition, vol. iii. p. cxxiv.

ERASMUS

It is with an earnest exhortation to common work, to which the continuity of our social order still gives a profound significance, that More ends his picture of "Nowhere." He describes with bitter and indignant remonstrance the glaring inequalities and injustice of the so-called Commonwealths of his day—the "conspiracy of rich men procuring their own ends"; the patient suffering of the poor; the triumph of that "scornful lady," Pride, who "measureth not wealth and prosperity by her own commodities, but by the misery of others." And yet he sorrowfully admits—"As I cannot agree and consent to all things that he (Hythlodaye) said . . . so I must needs confess and grant that many things be in the Utopian Commonwealth which in our cities I may rather wish for than hope after."

Utopia indeed could never be brought down to earth; and More never lost touch of his own practical business, fondly though he might dream of a perfect in his imaginary state. Writing to Erasmus soon after the book was published, he says quaintly that he is in the clouds with the dream of a government offered to him by the Utopians; there he will be too high to think of common acquaintances, yet there will always be a place in his heart for Erasmus and Tunstal—and if they visit him, his subjects shall do them honour as the prince's friends. So he dreams on till morning dawns, and as his royalty vanishes he sinks back into what had now become his familiar mill-round at Court.<sup>1</sup>

In politics and in religion More had to meet the stern realities of an age of crises ; but the longing for brotherhood which illuminates every page of the Utopia remained the expression of his deepest thoughts. It was to the union between the Church and the New Learning that he looked for the great hope of the future. "No such cry" as his "of pity for the poor, of protest against the system of agrarian and manufacturing tyranny, had been heard since the days of Piers Ploughman."<sup>1</sup> It was the echo, he thought, of the Church's teaching. For Christ Himself would have all men brothers, and He "instituted among His all things common—and . . . the same community doth yet remain among the rightest Christian companies." It was in this longing for brotherhood that the Utopians with glad minds received the faith of Christ<sup>2</sup>; and it was in the community of the Catholic Church that More believed all wrongs could be redressed and the world pass to its New Birth.

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. App. 250. (Leyden ed. of Works, vol. iii. pt. 2.)

<sup>1</sup> A. W. Hutton, Sir Thomas More and his Utopia, p. 17.

<sup>2</sup> Arber's edition of R. Robinson's Transl. p. 144.

CHAPTER IV.

POLITICAL LIFE.

“So lieb mir meiner Seele Seligkeit ist, so lieb wird mir seyn wenn ich dem allgemeinen Wesen dienen kann.”—Wallenstein.

MORE'S political life may be said to have begun almost at the same time as the reign of Henry VIII. His professional income, gradually increasing, had reached little less than £400 (or about £5000 as the value of money is now) a year; and work of a more public character was coming to him. On July 5, 1509, he was named in commission with his father and another lawyer to take inquisition as to the possessions in Middlesex of William, Viscount Beaumont, deceased. And from February 22, 1510, he was for many years in the Commission of the Peace for Hampshire.<sup>1</sup> On September 3, 1510, he was elected one of the under-sheriffs of the city of London, and thus acted as judge in the County Court of London and Middlesex. Erasmus has given a description of the office and of More's conduct in it, in his letter to Ulrich von Hutten.<sup>1</sup> "This office, though not laborious, for the court sits only on every Thursday till dinner-time, is accounted very honourable. No judge of that court ever went through more causes; none ever decided them more uprightly; often remitting the fees to which he was entitled from the suitors. His deportment in this capacity endeared him extremely to his fellow-citizens." Of his exercise of the judicial duties of this post two amusing anecdotes have been told—one of his restoring a beggar's dog which his wife had found, and another of a trick he played on a conceited old justice, who declared that only fools could have their pockets picked.

<sup>1</sup> Feb. 22, 1510: Dec. 15, 1510: July 18, 1511 (Commission of Array): March 15, 1512: June 3, 1513: Jan. 24, 1514, etc. etc.

In 1509, he became a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, and he was reader there in 1511 and 1516. On February 1, 1514, we find him in the Commission of Sewers for the district extending along the Thames between East Greenwich and Lambeth.

In such employments the earlier years of the reign were passed, but with the new development of foreign policy into which England gradually drifted, More was forced into a wider sphere of action. For the first four years of the reign the peaceful traditions of Henry VII. had been maintained. Warham and Fox were both peace ministers, and Henry, though eager to enter into the European struggle which it was only a question of time how long England could avoid, perceived the deficiency of trained soldiers, and waited till some organization should have been attempted.

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. x. 30.

When at length war had been made it had been carried on with wonderful success, and the peace which concluded it had been in every way honourable. The remarkable development of diplomacy brought England, now regarded universally as the great home of money, more and more closely into connexion with the continental powers. The insincerity of the great States and their distrust of each other caused constant revolutions in the political arrangements of Europe; no sooner was one power victorious, than an ally would immediately make a treaty with the vanquished. A network of hypocrisy and tortuous procedure arose, which necessitated the employment of a large body of professed diplomats, whether ambassadors, special envoys, or spies. Into this system More was introduced almost as it were by chance. The relations of England with Charles of Castile and the Netherlands had been much strained, and it was decided to send an embassy to the Netherlands "for the continuance of the treaties of intercourse between the late Kings of England and Castile."<sup>1</sup> On hearing of this, the London merchants, who had suffered from the suspension of commercial intercourse, desired to be especially represented. More was already well known to the merchants of the Steelyard, whose interests were at stake; and his reputation had already reached the ears of Wolsey. Thus readily at their request<sup>2</sup> the King joined More to the Commission,<sup>3</sup> which consisted of Cuthbert Tunstal, <sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, Hen. VIII. ii. 422. <sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 8.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. (as above), May 1516.

Master of the Rolls and Archdeacon of Chester; Sir Thomas Spynell, resident at Bruges; Dr. Sampson, vicar-general of Tournay; and John Clifford, "governor of the English merchants."

The next day, May 8, 1514, the Court of Aldermen gave permission for More to appoint a deputy in his office,<sup>1</sup> and he started for Flanders on May 12. Spynell announced his arrival at Bruges with Tunstal<sup>2</sup> on the 18th, and on the 20th Sampson wrote to Wolsey expressing his pleasure at the honour of being named in the King's Commission with Dr. Tunstal and "young More."<sup>3</sup> The business, in which More and Clifford were specially charged with the commercial interests, was a tedious one: French influence was all powerful at the Court of Flanders, and the English envoys met with "taunts and checks, scarce within the bounds of friendly consideration." The Flemish merchants complained of many injuries in their commerce with England, besides the constant grievance of the Staple. Nor were the personal comforts of the ambassadors enviable. More, whose salary was only 13s. 4d. a day,<sup>4</sup> had not been paid; and it was not till Tunstal wrote to Wolsey to tell of his distress—"Master More at this time, as being at a low ebb, desires by your grace to be set on float again"—that a remittance of £20 was sent to him.<sup>5</sup> The Commission moved from Bruges to

<sup>1</sup> Extracts from City Records: App. to Mackintosh, Life of More.      <sup>2</sup> Brewer, ii. 473.      <sup>3</sup> Ibid. ii. 480.

<sup>4</sup> King's Book of Payments, Brewer, ii. 1647

<sup>5</sup> July 9, 1515, Brewer, ii. 679. Tunstal and Sampson received £30. See King's Book of Payments as above.

Brussels, and eventually to Antwerp, where More made the acquaintance of Petrus Ægidius. At last the negotiations were completed, and soon after the beginning of 1516<sup>1</sup> More was able to return to England. He had not enjoyed his experience of diplomacy. The honour, such as it was, scarcely counterbalanced the inconveniences of the position. Yet More had been able to gain an insight into the evils of the then-existing international relations, which he made abundant use of in his Utopia. Writing to Erasmus on his return to Court in February, he gives an amusing picture of its disadvantages. Tunstal, he said, had hardly been ten days in London, "when<sup>2</sup> he was sent off on another embassy; yet such an employment could not be half so inconvenient to him as it was to a layman. We laymen and you priests are not on equal terms on such occasions; for you leave no wives nor children at home, whereas whenever we laymen are away, we are called back by the love of our wives and families. When a priest starts on his mission, he can take his whole family with him, and feed at the king's expense those whom he must otherwise have fed at home. But whenever I am absent, I have two families to keep, one at home, and one

<sup>1</sup> Erasm. Epp. ii. 16.

<sup>2</sup> Some difficulty arises here about the dates. Roper states that More was sent on two embassies to Flanders, and almost every succeeding writer has accepted his statement. It appears, however, that the second embassy was that to Calais in August 1517, after More's knighthood and employment at Court. Of three embassies there is no record. Vide Erasmus to Ammonius, Brewer, ii. 3003, 3634, et seq. In December 1514 More became a member of the Society of Advocates (Doctors' Commons).

abroad. The king provides tolerably well for those whom I must take with me; but no consideration is paid to those whom I leave behind. You know what a kind husband I am, what an indulgent father and lenient master: and yet for all this I cannot prevail on my wife, children and servants, to close their mouths and stop eating till I return." With his conduct of the negotiations the King and Wolsey were much pleased, and he was requested to enter the royal service. He showed his reluctance to obey, even when a pension was pressed upon him, as large as the income he would lose by withdrawal from practice.<sup>1</sup> In the letter above quoted More mentions this to Erasmus, and declares that he believes he shall always decline a pension and office at Court, because it would oblige him either to resign his office in the city, which he preferred to a higher one, or to encourage suspicions of being biassed in favour of the Crown in case of any contest concerning privileges. For a short time the King consented to press no further; but a little later More was induced to accept a pension of £100 for life.<sup>2</sup> But less than a year passed before another occasion brought More into public notice. A Papal vessel at Southampton had been seized probably as a droit of the Admiralty, and claimed as a forfeiture by the King. The Papal envoy, Campeggio, demanded counsel to defend the right of the Pope; and More, who was appointed, argued with such learning and acuteness, that the cause was decided in favour of the Holy See.<sup>3</sup> The

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 10.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, ii.

<sup>3</sup> Roper, p. 8.

King, who had been present at the hearing of the suit, was so delighted with More's ability, that he could no longer submit to be without his service. The appointment of Master of Requests was conferred upon him in 1518, and a month later he was sworn of the Privy Council. In March 1517, Erasmus, writing to Tunstal,<sup>1</sup> notices that More, hitherto so inflexible, has been carried away to Court.

In the interval, however, between his rejection and his acceptance of the royal offer, More had published his Utopia, and thus given decisively to the world his views of international and domestic policy. The King accepted his services under no deception, and More fifteen years afterwards was able to remind him of the "most godly words that his Highness spake unto him at his first coming into his service, the most virtuous lesson that ever prince taught his servant, willing him first to look unto God and after God to him."<sup>2</sup> Thus, reluctant as he had been to take it, More could not but regard his new position as an honour to his opinions as well as to his abilities. Writing to Fisher,<sup>3</sup> he said—"I have come to court entirely against my will, and as the king himself often jestingly reproaches me for. And I am as uncomfortable as a carpet knight in the saddle. . . . Yet such is the virtue and learning of the king, and his daily increasing progress in both, that the more I see him increase in these kingly ornaments the less troublesome the courtier's life becomes to me."

<sup>1</sup> Brewer, ii. 3003.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 29.

<sup>3</sup> Stapleton, cap. vii. p. 229.

In the few months that passed between his summons to Court and his appointment to another foreign mission, More was able to perform some slight service in London, both as a member of the Council, and as still holding the office of under-sheriff, which he did not resign till July 23, 1519.<sup>1</sup> A great tumult took place on April 28, 1517, which was only put down with much difficulty. The jealousy of the London traders against foreigners, who in the last few years had been settling in London in great numbers, had risen to a high pitch. One John Lincolne, having failed to induce the famous Dr. Standish in the Spital Sermon on the Monday in Easter week to introduce the subject, prevailed upon a certain Dr. Bell to do so. From the text, Coelum coeli Domino, terram autem dedit filiis hominum, this worthy divine aroused his audience to frenzy by declaring that England was given to its natives, and not to strangers. The Council had due notice of the danger, and sent to enforce precautionary measures, but the very execution of the order caused a riot, which soon assumed alarming proportions. The prisons were broken open and foreigners' houses burnt; and tranquillity was only secured by an armed force, after the heavy ordnance in the Tower had been directed against the city. More had been unremitting in his personal efforts to allay the disturbance, and had only been frustrated by the folly of his companions.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Extracts from City Records, App. to Mackintosh, Life of More.

<sup>2</sup> Stow, Annals (ed. 1631), p. 505 et seq. Cres. More, p. 49. Walter's Life of More, p. 67.

He was himself appointed when the riots were over to inquire into their origin. In his Apology he thus described his action.<sup>1</sup> "Even here in London after the great business that was there on a May day in the morning, by a rising made against strangers, for which divers of the prentices and journeymen suffered execution of treason, by an old statute made long before, against all such as would violate the king's safe conduct; I was appointed among others to search out and enquire by diligent examination in what wise and by what persons that privy confederacy began. And in good faith after great time taken and much diligence used therein, we perfectly tried out at last that all that business of any rising to be made for the matter, began only by the conspiracy of two young lads that were prentices in Cheapside, which, after the thing devised first and compared between them twain, perused privily to journeymen first, and after the prentices, of many of the mean crafts in the city, bearing the first that they spake with in hand, that they had secretly spoken with many other occupations already and that they were all agreed thereunto, and that besides them there were two or three hundred serving men of divers lords' houses and some of the king's too, which would not be named nor known, that would yet in the night be at hand, and when they were once up, would not fail to fall in with them and take their part. Now this ungracious invention and these words of those two lewd lads (which yet in the business fled always themselves and never came again after) did put some other, by their oversight and lightness, in such a courage and boldness that they wende themselves able to avenge their displeasure in the night, and after either never to be known or to be strong enough to bear it out and go farther." From such small causes do great confusions spring, thought More; and he had henceforth a fine contempt for popular demonstrations. He compared the heretics to these misguided prentices, misled by their "pot-headed apostles."

<sup>1</sup> Apology, ed. 1533, pp. 261, 262.

But More was not only useful at home. The tortuous negotiations with France, which Wolsey disguised with so much care even from the keen inquiry of the Venetian Ambassador, were at this time dragging their slow course, and a suitable cloak for deeper projects was obtained in the sending of an embassy to Calais, to settle the disputes between the French and English merchants. On August 27, 1517, a Commission<sup>1</sup> was issued to Sir Richard Wingfield, then deputy of Calais, Dr. William Knight, and Thomas More. They were to meet the French representatives, having full power to receive and adjudicate upon complaints, and make the necessary compensation. It was hoped that the merchants would be thus saved the expenses of the law courts. This negotiation was even more tedious than the former, and from the incomplete records of its progress that are obtainable, we should infer that it lasted for at least six months. The Commissioners' allowance seems to have been higher than on More's previous mission<sup>2</sup>; but Erasmus, writing to Ægidius, declared that More was living at great expense, and engaged in business most odious to him. The French Commissioners did all in their power to delay any result, declaring that their commission was not complete.<sup>1</sup> They appear however to have been reasonable in their demands.<sup>2</sup> More hoped at one time to have seen Erasmus at Calais, but apparently was disappointed.

<sup>1</sup> Brewer, ii. 3634. <sup>2</sup> King's Book of Payments, Aug. 1517.

On his return to England, More was in constant attendance on the Court. In April 1518, Pace, writing from Abingdon to Wolsey, complains of the inconveniences which the Master of Requests was undergoing, his daily allowance of meat not being provided by the Lord Steward, and therefore having to be bought in the town, "which is to him intolerable, and to the king's grace dishonourable."<sup>3</sup> In September we have an amusing admission in the letter of the acute Giustiniani of how difficult it was to extract information from the newly made councillor. On October 4, More was one of the signatories of the treaty between England and France, in which the marriage of the Dauphin with the Princess Mary was arranged.<sup>4</sup> As soon as the negotiations at Calais had been over, there had been others at Bruges, and More's name appears constantly in diplomatic memoranda, and at home, especially during 1519, in correspondence with Wolsey as to politics and international relations.<sup>5</sup> In April 1520, his name occurs among those who signed the treaties between

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, ii. 3750.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. ii. 3766, 3773, 3803.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. ii. 4055.

<sup>5</sup> E. g. Ibid. vol. iii. 333, 356.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. ii. 4499.

Henry and Charles V.<sup>1</sup> and he rode in the gallant train which met the Emperor at Canterbury. In the autumn of that year he was again at Bruges, negotiating with the representatives of the Hanse towns. It was then that he tricked the boastful Fleming who offered to dispute with any man on any thesis, by propounding that fine question of English law—"an averia capta in withernamia sunt irreplegiabilia"—whether cattle seized under writ of distress are irrepleviable.

Abroad he made many friends: but he was most needed at home. The King, so Pace wrote to Wolsey, was earnest to put young men into his affairs, since "old men decay greatly,"<sup>2</sup> and so in 1521 More was knighted, and succeeded Weston as Treasurer of the Exchequer,<sup>3</sup> and from this time was closely attached to the Court. In 1522 he took an important part in the ceremonies attending the second visit of Charles V. At this time he was one of the King's chief secretaries, and through him Henry communicated with Wolsey whenever the Cardinal was not at Court. A number of letters, which passed at this period between Wolsey and More, exist, but the matters with which they are concerned are of no private interest. From chance expressions however various details of More's position at Court may be obtained, which fully confirm Roper's account of the familiarity to which he was admitted.<sup>4</sup> At present the first stirrings of the Reformation had

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, ii. 739, 740.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. vol. iii. 2900.

<sup>3</sup> Erasm. Epp. xvii. 16.

<sup>4</sup> E. g. Sept. 21, 1522. Letters and Papers, iii. 2555.

served to bring him more closely into connexion with the King, especially in the matter of Luther's book. Nor was his service unrewarded : he shared in the spoil of the unhappy Buckingham, receiving the manor of South, Kent.<sup>1</sup>

The Parliament which was summoned on account of the necessities of the great French war, met on Wednesday, April 15, 1523, in the magnificent hall at Blackfriars. More was a member, but no inquiries as to his constituency have as yet been successful.<sup>2</sup> If we can reason from precedents, however, it was almost certainly one of the counties. His friend Tunstal preached the opening sermon, and, probably by the King's direction, the House of Commons, on Saturday, April 18, presented as their chosen Speaker, Sir Thomas More. He made the usual excuse of disability, comparing himself to Phormio, and the King to Hannibal, in the tale. Wolsey, as Chancellor, replied that 'his majesty, by long experience of his services, was well acquainted with his wit, learning, and discretion; and therefore he thought that the Commons had chosen the fittest person to be their speaker.<sup>1</sup> More again replied according to usage, accepting the office with reluctance, and demanding the recognition of the privileges of the Speaker and the House. Roper<sup>2</sup> thinks this speech worthy of insertion in his work, probably from his father-in-law's manuscript, but it contains no point of great interest.

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, iii. 2239.

<sup>2</sup> "As the whole of his life passed during the great chasm in writs for election and returns of members of parliament, from 1477 to 1542, the places for which Sir T. More sat, and the year of his early opposition to a subsidy, are unascertained ; notwithstanding the obliging exertions of the gentlemen employed in the repositories at the Tower and in the Rolls' chapel. We know that he was Speaker of the House of Commons in 1523 and 1524. Browne Willis owns his inability to fix the place (Notit. Parliament, iii. 112) ; but he conjectured it to have been 'either Middlesex, where he resided, or Lancaster, of which he was chancellor.' But that writer would not have mentioned the latter branch of his alternative, if he had known that More was not chancellor of the duchy till two years after his speakership."—Mackintosh, Life of More, preface. See Letters and Papers, iii. 2956.

The critical period of More's life now begins. Wolsey, having obtained a large grant from Convocation, in spite of the opposition of Fisher and Fox, went down to the House of Commons on April 29, and, having dilated upon the perfidy of the French King, and the necessity of giving powerful aid to the Emperor, demanded £800,000, and proposed that it should be obtained by a fifth of all goods for four years.<sup>3</sup> Of the subsequent debates Roper gives a dramatic account, which has found its way into most of the biographies of More, but which is hardly reconcilable with our information from other sources.

"At this Parliament Cardinal Wolsey found himself much grieved with the Burgesses thereof, for that nothing was so soon done or spoken therein, but that it was immediately blown abroad in every alehouse. It fortuned at that Parliament a very great subsidy to be demanded, which the Cardinal fearing it would not pass the common house, determined for the furtherance thereof, to be there present himself; before whose coming after long debating there, whether it were better but with a few of his lords (as the most opinion of the house was), or with a whole train royally to receive him there amongst them, 'Masters,' quoth Sir Thomas More, 'forasmuch as my Lord Cardinal lately, you wot well, laid to our charge the lightness of our tongues for things uttered out of this house, it shall not be amiss in my mind to receive him with all his pomp, with his maces, his pillars, his poleaxes, his crosses, his hat, and great seal too; to the intent that if he find the like fault with us hereafter, we may be the bolder from ourselves to lay the blame upon those that his grace bringeth with him.' Whereunto the house wholly agreeing, he was received accordingly. Where after he had in a solemn oration by many reasons proved how necessary it was the demands there moved to be granted, and further said that less would not serve the king's purpose; he seeing the company still silent, and thereunto nothing answering, and contrary to his expectation shewing in themselves towards his requests no towardness of inclination, said unto them: 'Masters, ye have many wise and learned men among you, and sith I am from the king's own person sent hither unto you, for the preservation of your own selves and all the Realm, I think it meet you give me a reasonable answer.' Whereat every man holding his peace, then began he to speak to one Mr. Marney, who making him no answer neither, he severally asked the same question of divers others accounted the wisest of the company. To whom when none of them all would give so much as one word, being before agreed, as the custom was, by their speaker to make answer; 'Masters,' quoth the Cardinal, 'unless it be the manner of your house, as of likelihood it is, in such causes to utter your minds by the mouth of your speaker, whom ye have chosen for trusty and wise (as indeed he is), here is without doubt a marvellous obstinate silence'; and thereupon required the answer of Mr. Speaker, who reverently upon his knees excusing the silence of the house, abashed at the presence of so noble a personage, able to amaze the wisest and best learned in a Realm, and after by many reasons proving, that for them to make answer was it neither expedient, nor agreeable with the ancient liberty of the house; in conclusion for himself shewed, that though they had all with their voices trusted him, yet except every one of them could put into his own head all their several wits, he alone in so weighty a matter was unmeet to make his Grace answer. Whereupon the Cardinal displeased with Sir Thomas More, that had not in this Parliament in all things satisfied his desire, suddenly rose and departed."<sup>1</sup> Roper then goes on to relate that Wolsey resented the action of his courageous opponent, and cried, "Would Ged you had been at Rome when I made you Speaker!" and that he wished to have him sent as ambassador to Spain to get rid of him, but that Henry readily accepted More's excuses, saying, "It is not our pleasure to do you hurt, but to do you good we should be glad."

<sup>1</sup> Brewer (pref. to Letters and Papers, vol. iii. p. 237) thinks it probable, Walter (Life of More, p. 87) states for certain, that More was chosen Speaker by the King's command. The latter writer gives no authority.

<sup>2</sup> Pages 10—12.

<sup>3</sup> Lord Herbert's Henry VIII, p. 134.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, pp. 12—14.

Any statement of Roper's, who lived in the closest intimacy with his father-in-law under the same roof for more than sixteen years, must have great weight. In this case, the story is told with remarkable circumstance of detail; and Roper, living at that very time at Chelsea, could hardly be ignorant of the doings of this Parliament and of its Speaker. At the same time there is no support whatever to his statement from any other source, and other information seems directly to point to the improbability of such a scene having occurred; nor must it be forgotten that Roper has made other evident mistakes, though none of such importance as this. It can hardly be conceived that Wolsey would be so ignorant of the privileges and customs of the House of Commons, as he appears in this scene; nor, even on à priori grounds, would it be likely that one of the royal secretaries, living in daily intercourse with the King and his great minister as the confidant of most if not of all their plans, would make himself the exponent of direct opposition to a proposal, to which he had previously in all probability agreed. Not only this: but the utmost cordiality seems to have existed between Wolsey and More; and it is certain that in the discussions on the subsidy More constantly supported the royal demands, and at the end of the session received, by Wolsey's express request, a substantial mark of the royal gratitude.

The debates seem in reality to have proceeded quite otherwise than as Roper tells the story. On Wolsey's departure, after his explanation of the royal demand, there was much discussion. On the next day More supported the Chancellor's plan, and showed that four shillings in the pound could not be considered extravagant on such an occasion. Opposition was raised on the ground that "though some were well monied, in general the fifth part of men's goods was not in plate or money, but in stock or cattle, and that to pay away all their coin would alter the frame and intercourse of all things."<sup>1</sup> Another position was taken in the speech made by Cromwell, who opposed the King's going to the war, and advocated fighting the French on Scots ground. A long speech for the Court is epitomized by Lord Herbert of Cherbury:<sup>2</sup> it is attributed to More, and is certainly much in his style of argument and expression. By this taxation, it was said, the money was not lost to the nation: no more indeed happened than by the ordinary course of markets. Let the rich men go to the war themselves, and show that they deserve their great possessions by the courage with which they can defend them. The objection that the money would be carried out of England was unreasonable, for would it not carry the men also? "Notwithstanding," continued the Speaker, "if you be so obstinate as to believe that making war in a country brings money into it, do but conceive awhile that the French had invaded us. Would the money they brought over, think you, enrich our country, or should any of us be the better for it? Let us therefore lay aside those poor scruples and do what may be worthy the dignity and honour of our nation. When you did conceive the worst that can fall out, you should yet eat your beef and mutton here, and wear your country cloth ; while others, upon a short allowance, fought only that you might enjoy your families and liberty. But I say confidently, you need not fear this penury or scarceness of money, the intercourse of things being so established throughout the world that there is perpetual derivation of all that can be necessary to mankind. Thus your commodities will ever find out money ; while, not to go far, I shall produce our own merchants only, who, let me assure you, will be always as glad of your corn and cattle as you can be of anything they bring you. Let us, therefore, in God's name, do what becomes us ; and for the rest, entertain so good an opinion of our soldiers as to believe that, instead of leaving our country bare, they will add new provinces to it, or at least, bring rich spoils and triumphs home."

<sup>1</sup> Henry VIII. (edit. 1682), p. 134.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., and Walter's Life of More, p. 91.

After debate it was agreed that a subsidy on a graduated scale should be granted ; but the sum did not reach what Wolsey had asked. Then the Cardinal came down again to the House to address the members. His speech was heard in silence, but, say Hall and Lord Herbert, More intimated that it could not be discussed in his presence,—“it was the order of the House to hear, and not to reason, save among themselves.” Subsequently it was decided that a fifth should be granted by those holding lands to the value of five pounds and upwards. On the reassembling of the House after an adjournment, the knights of the shire agreed to continue their grant to a fourth year, and proposed that it should be paid also by those who had five pounds in gold. After a heated discussion More interfered as a peacemaker, and secured the acceptance of the motion.

It was natural that Wolsey, though all that he had asked had not been obtained, should be grateful to More: and on August 24<sup>1</sup> he wrote to the King, advising the gift of £100 to the Speaker for his household, in addition to the ordinary fee of £100. The reward can never have been better deserved than by the "faithful diligence" of More "in all your causes treated in this your late parliament, as well as for your subsidy." He adds, "I am the rather moved to put your highness in mind thereof, because he is not the most ready to speak and solicit his own cause." So far was Wolsey from feeling any displeasure against More. The latter, writing to the Cardinal two days afterwards, mentions that the King has ordered that he receive the £200 from the exchequer.<sup>2</sup> As the relations between More and Wolsey have here come into prominence, it may be well to notice other references to their connexion. They are said to have first become acquainted at Oxford,<sup>3</sup> when More was a student at Canterbury College and Wolsey bursar of Magdalen; and the "epigrams" of the former contain a high compliment to the latter. Writing to Erasmus in February 1516, More spoke in the highest terms of the new Chancellor. "He acquits himself," said the young barrister, "so well as to outdo expectation, and, what must be admitted to be very difficult, even after so excellent a predecessor he gives the greatest satisfaction." Ammonius, speaking of More's return to England after his first embassy, describes him as among the earliest in paying salutations to Wolsey. The Cardinal fully appreciated his ability, and was at least as anxious as the King to bring him to Court; nor can his subsequent promotions have taken place without the minister's approbation. At the time of the Parliament of 1523, and for some years afterwards, the two statesmen were in constant correspondence: More was acting, on occasion, as the medium of communication between the King and the Chancellor, explaining, illustrating, enforcing, the views of the latter, with all his energy and skill. The letters that passed between them were always of the most cordial kind. Wolsey commits the most delicate matters to the charge of More, sure of his appreciation and diligence: More repays the confidence with zeal and affection. The biographers of the latter have invariably endeavoured to suggest a hostility between their hero and the great Cardinal, but their case is almost entirely without support. No good minister was ever condemned by his fall to such immediate as well as enduring unpopularity as was Wolsey. Of this feeling Erasmus, probably because he did not consider that he had been sufficiently noticed by the fallen statesman, and quite inconsistently with the opinions he had expressed during the Cardinal's exercise of power, made himself one of the exponents; and—as far as we can see—gratuitously, informed the world when it was mourning for the death of More, that the conscientious statesman “had never been liked by Wolsey.” Roper and succeeding Roman Catholic writers, among whom Wolsey has never been popular, gave credit to the same view.

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, iii. 3267.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. iii. 3270.

<sup>3</sup> Walter, p. 6.

That the relations between the Cardinal and More continued to be cordial, a glance at some of the letters that passed between them suffice to show.

Writing to “my Lord Legate”<sup>1</sup> on September 1, 1523, More described how he had shown his letters to the King, and how Henry had been delighted with his skill and wisdom in the difficult business regarding Scotland, and “perceived what great labour Wolsey had taken when the reading only of those papers had held him more than two hours.” “I never saw him like things better,” added the writer, “and, in my poor fantasy, not causelessly; for it (the letter to the King’s sister, the Queen of Scots) is one of the best made letters for words, matter, sentence, and couching, that ever I read in my life.” On the 4th,<sup>2</sup> More wrote again—this time on the directions to be given for the movement of Suffolk’s army from Calais—and expressed his pleasure “that his own services were so well liked” by Wolsey. The correspondence was constant.

<sup>1</sup> State Papers, i. 128; Ellis, Letters, 1st Series, i. 203.

<sup>2</sup> State Papers, i. 130.

More wrote on the 12th,<sup>1</sup> about the preparation for the siege of Boulogne; on the 13th, about the negotiations with Bourbon;<sup>2</sup> on the 22nd and on the 24th, concerning the Scotch difficulty;<sup>3</sup> and on the 30th, in joyful acknowledgment of the success of Suffolk's army.<sup>4</sup> Nor was he solely engaged in attendance on the King; he was on the Commission for Middlesex, to collect the subsidy in the grant of which his own exertions had so greatly aided. He was also on the Commission of the Peace<sup>5</sup> for the same county, and on his own account he seems to have entered into mercantile undertakings.<sup>6</sup>

During the years 1524 and 1525 there is little to notice in the correspondence between More and Wolsey, except the amusing incidents connected with the arrest of one of the servants of the Imperial ambassador by a patrol, and the perusal of the ambassador's reports by More (to whom they were taken when he was still in bed very early one morning) and Wolsey. These are detailed at great length in the indignant correspondence of de Praet, and led to the writing of a great number of State Papers, ending in the publication of an official Vindication of the English.<sup>7</sup>

In 1526, More's name occurs among those who took part in the ceremony with which, on June 16,

<sup>1</sup> State Papers, i. 131.      <sup>2</sup> Ibid. 130.      <sup>3</sup> Ibid. 140.

<sup>4</sup> Ellis, Letters, 1st Series, i. 210.

<sup>5</sup> April and October 1523; Letters and Papers, iii. 3495, 2993.

<sup>6</sup> E. g. Letters and Papers, iv. 2248; License to export 1000 woollen cloths.

<sup>7</sup> See Spanish State Papers, 1525-26, especially pp. 50, 62.

the King's natural son Henry, a little boy of six, was created Duke of Richmond. On August 14, he was among the signatories of the truce between England and France, and on the 30th, of the "treaty of the More." He received a further acknowledgment of his services on the death of Sir Richard Wingfield, when he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.<sup>1</sup>

In 1526, too, he was made one of a Committee of the Council of but three members, of whom two were every day to see the King,<sup>1</sup> waiting for him "every day in the forenoon by ten of the clock at the furthest, and at afternoon by two of the clock."<sup>2</sup>

Thus almost daily More had long speech with the King, and the talk began more and more to turn upon the religious matters in which he had become keenly interested.

Critical questions began to press on him both in his own thoughts and on behalf of the King in the controversy with Luther. Nor had he been able, much as he wished it, to keep out of the discussions and projects to which the question of the Divorce gave rise. The King early mooted to him his 'secret matter,' and 'sore pressed him' for an answer on it. After excusing himself as long as he could, he at last agreed to confer with the Bishops of Durham and Bath, and taking with him the passages from Scripture with which the King had supported his argument, compared them 'with the exposition of divers of the old holy doctors.' When he returned to the King, “in talking with his grace of the foresaid matter, he said, ‘To be plain with your grace, neither my lord of Durham nor my lord of Bath, though I know them both to be wise, virtuous, and learned, and honourable prelates, nor myself with the rest of your council, being all your grace’s own servants, for your manifold benefits daily conferred upon us so most bounden unto you, be in my opinion meet counsellors for your grace herein ; but if your grace minds to understand the truth, such counsellors may you have devised, as neither for respect of their own worldly commodity, nor for fear of your princely authority will be inclined to deceive you.’ To whom he named ‘S. Jerome, S. Augustine, and divers other holy doctors, both Greeks and Latins ; and moreover showed him what authority he had gathered out of them, which although the king did not very well like of, yet were they by Sir Thomas More (who in all his communications with the king in that matter had always most wisely behaved himself) so wisely tempered, that he both presently took them in good part and often times had thereof conference with him again.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Mackintosh, p. 91, note.

<sup>2</sup> Brewer, Henry VIII. i. 54.

When Campeggio arrived and was received in London with solemn formality by the religious and secular authorities, to More was committed the task of delivering the Latin oration with which he was greeted. In such ceremonies his position entitled and obliged him to share ; but he took no part in advancing the King’s great desire. Henry employed him in other matters. It was rumoured at one time that he was to be sent to Ireland ;<sup>1</sup> but we hear no more of it. On May 29, 1529, he was Commissioner<sup>2</sup> with Stephen Gardiner, then Archdeacon of Taunton, for the signature of a new engagement with Francis I., in which Wolsey's visit to France was arranged. On July 3, the Cardinal arrived at Calais, attended by a gorgeous train, among whom were the Bishop of London, the Lord Chamberlain, the Master Controller, and the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, pp. 20, 21.

It is no part of our task to give any account of the mission ; More has unfortunately left no record of it, and, indeed, his concern in it seems to have been purely ceremonial. Wolsey returned to Court at the end of September, and was followed by a French embassy, by which 'pensions' were lavishly distributed, More receiving one hundred and fifty crowns.<sup>3</sup>

In July, the Chancellor of the Duchy accompanied Tunstal to Cambray, to mediate, on the part of England, between Charles V. and Francis I. Their commission was issued on June 30.<sup>4</sup> After attesting the treaty of Cambray on August 5,<sup>5</sup> and signing also a mercantile treaty with the Archduchess Margaret, they returned to England. On this mission, says Roper,<sup>6</sup> "Sir Thomas More so worthily handled himself (procuring in our league far more benefits unto his realm than at that time by the king and council was possible to be compassed), that for his good service on that voyage, the king, when he after made him

<sup>1</sup> Du Bellay to Montmorency, Letters and Papers, iv. 5679.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. iv. 3138. <sup>3</sup> Letters and Papers, iv. 3619.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. iv. 5744. <sup>5</sup> Ibid. iv. 5829. <sup>6</sup> Pages 22, 23.

Lord Chancellor, caused the Duke of Norfolk openly to declare unto the people, how much all England was bound unto him."

Yet all this while he was sad at heart. "So on a time," says Roper,<sup>1</sup> with the quaint pathos which is the great charm of his work, "walking along the Thames side with me at Chelsea, in talking of other things, he said to me, 'Now would to God, son Roper, upon condition three things were well established in Christendom I were put in a sack and here presently cast into the Thames.' 'What great things be these, sir,' quoth I, 'that would move you so to wish?' 'Wouldst thou know, son Roper, what they be?' quoth he. 'Yea, marry, sir, with a good will if it please you,' quoth I. 'I faith they be these, son,' quoth he. 'The first is, that whereas the most part of Christian princes be at mortal wars, they were at universal peace. The second, that where the Church of Christ is at this present sore afflicted with many heresies and errors, it were well settled in an uniformity of Religion. The third, that where the king's matter of his marriage is now come into question, it were to the glory of God and quietness of all parties brought to a good conclusion ;' whereby, as I could gather, he judged that otherwise it would be a disturbance to a great part of Christendom. Thus did it by his doings throughout the whole course of his life appear that all his travails and pains, without respect of earthly commodities either to himself or any of his, were only upon the service of God, the prince and the realm, wholly bestowed and employed.

<sup>1</sup> Pages 16, 17.

Whom in his latter time I heard to say that he never asked of the king the value of one penny."

No sooner had More returned from Cambray than he found the King had by no means given up the hope of winning him over to his views. Henry insisted on his conferring with Stokesley, then Archdeacon of Dorset, who was elevated to the see of London in the next year.<sup>1</sup> Still More remained firm in his opinion, though he made no boast of it, anxious even to see as the King saw, if in honour and conscience he might. The theologian, partisan though he was, admitted "that he found him in his grace's cause very toward, and desirous to find some good matter wherewith he might truly serve his grace to his content." It was a dangerous moment. At the council held, as usual to prepare business for Parliament, the King had treated Wolsey with contempt; yet, in spite of the disgrace which he had seen preparing for some time, the Cardinal clung to office. It might have seemed that when he fell More would fall with him. Not only, however, was Henry's animosity always personal rather than extensive, but he well knew the value of such a servant. Moreover the Duke of Norfolk, the leader of the party that now had the royal ear, was More's "singular dear friend."<sup>2</sup> Wolsey himself declared, it was said, that More was the only person fit to succeed him.<sup>3</sup> Thus it was, and also, as men suspected,<sup>1</sup> from a hope that by such promotion he might be inclined towards the divorce, that when Wolsey had reluctantly yielded up the great seal, it was delivered by the King to Sir Thomas More.

<sup>1</sup> Here occurs another of Roper's inaccuracies. He makes Stokesley Bishop of London before More was Chancellor. One must therefore choose at will the date of the conference between them. <sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 30.

<sup>3</sup> Erasmus to John Faber, Bishop of Vienne.

That his greatness was thrust upon him, no one who knows anything of his character can doubt. Long before, he had seen the nature of the King's confidence, and it can hardly be doubted that he foresaw, if not the circumstances, yet certainly the result of his taking office. His onward path was no "blindfold walking"; he well knew that "behind him stalked the headsman." His acceptance of the great seal, rightly estimated, seems one of the noblest and most conscientious acts of a noble and conscientious life.

On Tuesday, October 20, 1529, Sir Thomas More took the oaths in the great hall at Westminster, in the presence of the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk and many of the nobility.<sup>2</sup> Not a murmur, open or secret, arose at the appointment; the people "were gathered together with great applause and joy";<sup>3</sup> even Wolsey, in his misery, declared that no man in England was more worthy.<sup>4</sup> The new Chancellor was installed by the Duke of Norfolk, who delivered a speech, not preserved by Roper, but given in full by Cresacre More.<sup>5</sup> "The king's <sup>1</sup> So said Pole (Stapleton, cap. xiv. p. 294) and Thuanus (Hist. sui temporis, lib. ii. cap. 16, "Nentiquam Regis causae aequior").

<sup>2</sup> Rymer, xiv. 349.

<sup>3</sup> Cres. More, p. 156.

<sup>4</sup> Stapleton, cap. iii. p. 172.

<sup>5</sup> Pages 166—168. It may seem the language of the seventeenth rather than the sixteenth century.

majesty," he said, "hath raised to the most high dignity of Chancellorship Sir Thomas More, a man for his extraordinary worth and sufficiency well known to himself and the whole realm, for no other cause or earthly respect, but for that he hath plainly perceived all the gifts of nature and grace to be heaped upon him, which either the people could desire or himself wish for, for the discharge of so great an office. For the admirable wisdom, integrity, and innocence, joined with most pleasant facility of wit, that this man is endowed withal, have been sufficiently known to all Englishmen from their youth, and for these many years to the king's majesty himself. . . . He hath perceived no man in his realm to be more wise in deliberating, more sincere in opening to him what he thought, or more eloquent in expressing what he uttered." Then, after declaring that More's virtues were such as made permissible the elevation of a layman to an office which custom of recent times had given to ecclesiastics, he commended the Chancellor to the "joyful acclamations of the people."

It is difficult to regard the speech in the form given by Cresacre More, or, indeed, the reply of the Chancellor, as authentic; both seem to be an expansion, not altogether free from anachronisms, of the simple statement of Roper, who confesses that the speeches "are not now in his memory." Taking, then, the probably more accurate words of Roper, we are told that More, "among many other his humble and wise sayings, answered that though he had good cause to rejoice of his highness' singular favour towards him, that he had far above his deserts so highly commended him, yet nevertheless he must for his own part needs confess that in all things by his grace alleged he had done no more than was his duty. And further disabled himself as unmeet for that room, wherein considering how wise and honourable a prelate had lately before taken so great a fall, he had, he said, thereof no cause to rejoice.”<sup>1</sup> And so at the moment when all men were reviling Wolsey, the new Chancellor took office with words of praise as honourable to the fallen statesman as to himself.

On the 3rd of November the Parliament assembled at Blackfriars, the King being present. According to the brief account in the Parliament Rolls,<sup>2</sup> Sir Thomas More, as Chancellor, in the opening speech declared the cause of the summons to be, “to reform such things as have been used or permitted in England by inadvertence or by the changes of time have become inexpedient, and to make new statutes and laws, where it is thought fit.” “On these errors and abuses he discoursed,” continues the Roll, “in a long and elegant speech, declaring with great eloquence what was needful for their reformation: and in the end he ordered the Commons in the king’s name to assemble next day in their accustomed house, and choose a Speaker, whom they should present to the king.”

Of More’s speech Hall<sup>3</sup> gives a more full account, which is scarcely reconcilable with the statement of the Roll,<sup>1</sup> and still less with More's character. "When the king was seated on his throne, Sir Thomas More, his chancellor, standing on his right hand, made an eloquent oration : ' Like as a good shepherd, which not only keepeth and attendeth well his sheep, but also foreseeth and provideth for all things that may be hurtful or noisome to the flock : so the king, which is the shepherd, ruler, and governor of his realm, vigilantly foreseeing things to come, considering how divers laws by the mutation of things are insufficient and imperfect, and also by the frail condition of man divers new enormities are sprung up among the people, for the which no law is yet made to reform the same—for this cause the king at this time hath summoned his high court of Parliament. And I liken the king to a shepherd . . . and as you see that, amongst a great flock, some are rotten and faulty, which the good shepherd sendeth from the sound sheep, so the great wether, which is of late fallen, as you all know, so craftily, so scabbedly, yea, so untruly, juggled with the king, that all men must needs guess that he thought in himself either the king had no wish to perceive his crafty doings, or else that he would not see nor know them. But he was deceived ; for his grace's sight was so quick and penetrable, that he saw him, yea, and saw through him, both within and without : and according to his desert he hath a gentle correction ; which small punishment the king will not to be an example to other offenders, but openly declareth that whosoever hereafter shall make the like attempts, or counsel the like offences shall not escape with the like punishment.''" This report bears an appearance of exactness, which makes it impossible, in the face of the rather negative than positive evidence of the Parliament Rolls, at once to condemn it as untrue; and it is to some extent corroborated by the long letter which Chapuys wrote to the Emperor detailing the events of the opening of Parliament. More, as Chancellor, was bound to vindicate Henry's action, but there are some considerations tending to throw discredit upon the speech as Roper gives it. If we have been right in inferring that in their account of the Parliament of 1523, the early biographers of More were misled by their feeling against Wolsey into evident inaccuracy, there is no reason why a similar error should not have been committed by a writer who is well known as extremely hostile both to Wolsey and More. The speech is inconsistent with Roper's account of his father-in-law's words in the Chancery, and even more so with the tone of his long correspondence with the Cardinal. Nor was More a man to turn on a fallen minister in such a manner, or join in a popular cry of resentment.<sup>1</sup> It must not be forgotten that Hall is the only authority for the speech in this form.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 24.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, vol. ii. 6043.

<sup>3</sup> Page 764.

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, vol. iv. Preface, p. 538.

It must be added, however, that the name of the Chancellor appears at the head of the signatures to the articles against Wolsey presented by the House of Lords to the King, on December 1. And Chapuys shows that More did vindicate the King's action, and speak severely of Wolsey's policy.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> I speak not without temerity, for Bishop Creighton, whom it is rash indeed to oppose, accepts the speech without demur, and writes of "unworthy taunts at his defeated adversary" (Wolsey, p. 190). But Wolsey was not More's adversary.

During the short session of this Parliament much important business was done, but we have no record of More's share in it. There can be no doubt that when the prorogation came, the release from his parliamentary duties would be felt as a great relief; for he had little sympathy with the work that was now in hand. The legal work of his office, especially during the prevalence of heresy, was sufficient to tax the energies of any man. Of the Chancellor's duties, apart from those connected with religion, a few words will suffice. It may be noticed in passing that for salary More received £142 15s., and 'for his attendance in the Star Chamber,' £200 a year. 'Also the chief butler was to allow him £64 a year for the price of 12 tuns of wine, and the keeper of the great state robe £16 a year for wax.'<sup>2</sup>

The occupation of the Court of Chancery was, of course, trifling, according to more modern ideas. In the century after More's time—when it seems to have decided on an average a hundred and sixty suits a year—its business had increased tenfold. "At the utmost," says Sir James Mackintosh,<sup>3</sup> "More did not hear more than two hundred cases and arguments yearly, including those of every description. No authentic account of any case tried before him, if any such be extant, has yet been brought to light. No law book alludes to any part of his judgments or reasonings. Nothing of this higher part of his judicial life is preserved which can justify us in believing more than that it must have displayed his never-failing integrity, reason, learning, and eloquence."

<sup>1</sup> Spanish State Papers, 1529-30, pp. 322-323.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, iv. 6079.

<sup>3</sup> Life of More, p. 125.

He sat every afternoon in "his open hall, to the intent that if any person had any suit unto him they might the more boldly come into his presence, and there open complaints before him."<sup>1</sup>

So indefatigable was he in the exercise of his office that on one occasion when he called for the next case, he was answered that the list was exhausted.<sup>2</sup> He ordered the fact to be put upon record, "and deservedly so," says one of his modern biographers, "as it is probably the only miracle of the kind mankind will ever witness."<sup>3</sup> Though his strict justice was remarkable in that age, his 'injunctions' did not pass without complaint from the common lawyers. This was brought to his notice by Roper, and he thereupon so satisfactorily explained all the injunctions that he had issued that the judges were forced to confess that they in similar cases would have done the same.

When they declined themselves to attempt any humane interpretation of the law, More said—"Forasmuch as yourselves, my lords, drive me to that necessity for awarding out injunctions to relieve the people's injury, you cannot hereafter any more justly blame me." To Roper he added—"I perceive, sir, why they like not so to do: for they see that they may, by the verdict of the jury, cast off all quarrels from themselves upon them, which they account their chief defence, and therefore am I compelled to abide the adventure of all such reports."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 25.

<sup>2</sup> Stapleton, cap. iii. p. 179.

<sup>3</sup> Walter, Life of More, p. 171.

Parliament was repeatedly prorogued "on account of the pestilence in London and its suburbs," and did not reassemble until January 6, 1531. During the recess More had as far as possible confined himself to his legal duties, for he was gradually more and more estranged from the Court in the matter which the King had most at heart. To the famous address to Clement VII. his name was not appended.<sup>2</sup> Yet while he never yielded unconscious compliance, he shunned unnecessary disobedience. Indeed, the great difference between More and Henry VIII., even were we to accept Mr. Froude's apologies for the King, can never be obliterated. The former never thought it right to do for the sake of public policy what in private life would have been a wrong act.<sup>3</sup>

On March 31, More, as Chancellor, went down

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 27.

<sup>2</sup> The date of the address has been the subject of discussion: Lord Herbert puts it, probably correctly, under the year 1530. Mr. Froude assigned it to 1531, giving arguments for the date, in which he quite forgot that the signature of Wolsey, who died Nov. 29, 1530, is appended to it.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Froude, Hist. Eng. vol. i. p. 417—"Let us compensate the poor queen's sorrows with unstinted sympathy, but let us not trifle with history by confusing a political necessity with a moral crime."

to the House of Commons to declare the favourable answers of the Universities on the Divorce, 'and to exhibit above an hundred books of several doctors, confirming the same opinion.'<sup>1</sup> Yet his views on this question, as well as on that of the supremacy, were perfectly well known. The letters of Chapuys to Charles V. contain very interesting references to the Chancellor's position. Of the assumption of the supremacy the ambassador wrote—"There is none that do not blame this usurpation, except those who have promoted it. The Chancellor is so mortified at it that he is anxious above all things to resign his office."<sup>2</sup> And again, of his feeling towards Queen Katherine and the Emperor<sup>3</sup>—"The Chancellor, as I have formerly written, has conducted himself most virtuously in this matter of the Queen, and certainly showed himself as well inclined towards your majesty as could be. He is the true father and protector of your majesty's subjects. Whenever any man of my suite has been at court, he has broken off his conversation with everybody else to attend to our business, and every one whom I have recommended to him he has despatched with a favourable answer." There are many other passages which show that More was in constant communication with the imperial agents and a most loyal supporter of the cause of the unhappy Katherine.

More retained his office for two years and a half. Amid ceaseless anxiety on account of the progress of heresy, and domestic grief—the death of his father whom he loved with such devotion and reverence—in spite, too, of the beginnings of a painful disease, he endeavoured manfully to do his duty according to his conscience. But the legislation of 1531 and 1532 was carried against all his sympathies, and the King still pressed him “to weigh and consider his great matter.”<sup>1</sup> During the session of 1532 he continued to support the political and financial projects of the Court;<sup>2</sup> but he opposed the King’s wishes in religious matters.<sup>3</sup> The passing of the Annates Act confirmed the resolution he had already formed, and he begged the Duke of Norfolk to submit his resignation to the King. After some trouble it was accepted; and on May 16, “about three o’clock in the afternoon, in the garden of York Place, by Westminster,” he delivered the great seal into the King’s hands. Henry seemed for the moment to feel a return of his old affection. “So pleased it his highness to say unto him, that for the good service he before had done him, in any suit which he should after have unto him, that either should concern his honour (for that word it liked his highness to use unto him) or that should appertain to his profit, he would find his highness a good and gracious lord unto him.”<sup>4</sup> More himself gave as his reason for resigning, “a sharp and constant pain in the chest”;<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Lord Herbert, p. 352.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, v. 112, from Vienna Archives.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. v. 120.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 29.

<sup>2</sup> See Chapuys to Charles V., April 10, 1532: Letters and Papers, v. 941.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. v. 1013, 1046.

<sup>4</sup> Roper, p. 30.

<sup>5</sup> Erasm. Ep. 1857. (Leyden edit. of Works, vol. iii.)

but public opinion took another view. "The Chancellor," wrote Chapuys to his master, "has resigned, seeing that affairs are going on badly, and likely to be worse, and that if he retained his office he would be obliged to act against his conscience or incur the King's displeasure—as he had already begun to do, for refusing to take his part against the clergy. His excuse is that his entertainment was too small, and that he was not equal to the work. Every one is concerned: for there never was a better man in the office."<sup>1</sup>

The morning after his resignation of the Chancellorship, More took a strange means of telling his wife what he had done. It was the custom for one of his attendants to go to Dame Alice's pew in Chelsea Church, on Festival Days when Mass was over, and tell her that "'my lord had gone before.' So on this morning More himself came, and, opening the door for her, said, 'Madam, my lord is gone.'" Then, as she imagined it to be but "one of his jests, as he used many unto her," he told her his meaning.<sup>2</sup>

After the resignation of his office,—receiving now no income from his profession or from the city as he had done when he entered the royal service,—he had only £50 a year, independent of grants from the Crown.<sup>3</sup> It was thus impossible for him to maintain his former household. For his gentlemen and servants, though with tears in their eyes they declared that they would rather serve him for nothing than others for high salaries, he found good positions.<sup>1</sup> His barge and eight watermen he gave to his successor, Sir Thomas Audley; his fool to the Lord Mayor. Then he called all his children together and told them how poor he had become: much as he wished that they should continue to live together, he could no longer pay for them all. “When he saw us all silent, and in that case not ready to show our opinions unto him”—so Roper describes the scene<sup>2</sup>—“Then will I,’ said he, ‘show my poor mind unto you. I have been brought up at Oxford, at an Inn of Chancery, at Lincoln’s Inn, and in the King’s Court, so forth from the lowest degree to the highest; and yet have I in yearly revenues little more than one hundred pounds at this present left me. So that we must be hereafter contributors together, if we look to live together. But by my counsel it shall not be best for us to fall to the lowest fare first. We will not therefore descend to Oxford fare, nor to the fare of New Inn, but we will begin with Lincoln’s Inn diet, where many right worshipful and of good years do live full well, which if we find not ourselves able the first year to maintain, then will we the next year after go one step down to New Inn fare, wherewith many an honest man is well contented. If that exceed our ability too, then will we the next year after descend to Oxford fare, where many grave, ancient, and learned fathers be conversant continually; which if our ability stretch not to maintain neither, then may we yet with bags and wallets go a begging together, and, hoping for pity some good folk will give their charity, at every man's door to sing Salve Regina, and so keep company merrily together.' " And Roper adds that when Sir Thomas's debts were paid he had not in his possession gold and silver, excepting his chain, to the amount of £100. There is a pathetic touch to be found in Harpsfield's Life,<sup>1</sup> which shows that this poverty, so cheerfully borne, was full of real hardships. "He was not able for the maintenance of himself and such as necessarily belonged to him, sufficiently to find meat, drink, fuel, apparel and such other necessary things; but was enforced and compelled, for lack of other fuel, every night before he went to bed, to cause a great burden of ferns to be brought into his own chamber, and with the blaze thereof to warm himself, his wife and his children; and so, without any other fire, to go to their beds." There could, indeed, be no better proof than his own life of the truth of his saying, "Good deeds the world, being ungrateful, is wont never to recompense; neither can it, were it grateful."

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, v. 1046: from Vienna Archives.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 32, and Cres. More, in further detail, p. 186.

<sup>3</sup> English Works, p. 867.

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 187.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 31.

<sup>1</sup> Harpsfield, Life of More. Lambeth MS. No. 827, quoted in a note, pp. 98-99 of Wordsworth's Ecclesiastical Biography, vol. ii.

CHAPTER V.

RELIGIOUS LIFE AND WORKS.

“Philosophia veritatem quaerit, theologia invenit, religio possidet.”—PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA.

THE early theological studies of More have already been mentioned, and his connexion with the awakening of religious inquiry in England has been referred to. A few words may recall his position, before his writings are specifically examined.

That his views were throughout his life in substantial accordance with those of Erasmus there can be little reason to doubt. In so far as humanism “consisted in a new and vital perception of the essential dignity of man apart from theological determinations” the whole tone of More’s writings proves him to have been a humanist. But this consciousness of man’s own dignity and power was combined in him with no under-estimation of the value of Christian doctrine. Rather was the ideal of his humanism distinctly the product of Christian thought. He was thus able to combine intense devotion to the Church with the strongest reprobation of ecclesiastical scandals and the most acute perception of the follies of a stagnant theology. He wrote some of his most stinging epigrams against ignorant and immoral priests and incompetent bishops. Before the publication of the Utopia, his antagonism to the tyranny of the Scotist theologians was well known, and he was looked upon with suspicion by those who thought that knowledge of Greek fostered heresy. In 1517 Pace could say of him (it was after telling an amusing story of one of his wit-combats with dull theologians)—

“This one piece of ill-luck, I grieve to tell you, follows More: whenever he speaks most skilfully and acutely among your white-mitred fathers with reference to their special science, they always condemn him and call all he says childish folly, not because they really think him worthy of condemnation, but because they are envious of his remarkable genius and his knowledge of other sciences whereof they are ignorant—in a word, because a mere boy (so they call him) a long way excels his elders in wisdom.”<sup>1</sup>

When Erasmus published his New Testament, More warmly commended it to the great men of the time, exclaiming in his verses to the reader (printed among his epigrams)—

“Nova Christi lex nova luce nitet.”

In 1519, he gave a most clear exposition of his dissent from the extravagances of popular belief and practice in a letter to a monk who had warned him against associating with the contemner of the Vulgate.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> De Fructu qui ex Doctrinā Percipitur, pp. 83, 84. Basil. 1517.

<sup>2</sup> Epistolae aliquot eruditorum virorum, pp. 92—138. Basil. 1520. See above, pp. 72 sqq.

In spite, however, of his sense of the vices of the clergy, More had abandoned few, if any, of the doctrines of the Church, in whose name it was that he rebuked sin and defended learning. This is most clearly seen in his controversial works, but even the Utopia is not without traces of the same attitude. No portion of More's ideal republic has been more often the subject of commentary than the chapter De Religionibus Utopiensium. On the beautiful picture of a benign and rational toleration which it presents Mr. Seebohm<sup>1</sup> has rightly laid much stress, but he has surely gone beyond his text when he finds in the Utopians a "fearless faith in the consistency of Christianity with science" and a "significant denial of any sacerdotal sense" to their priesthood. Is there any less slender foundation for a statement of the Utopians' faith in the consistency of Christianity with science than the words gratum Deo cultum putant naturae contemplationem laudemque ab ea?<sup>2</sup> The "significant denial" of sacerdotalism Mr. Seebohm supports by a quotation which is scarcely correct; and he does not observe the prostration of the people on the priest's entrance, or the distinctly mentioned eucharistic significance of his vestments. The question is of interest only as showing how far the Utopia represents More's own opinions, for few who have read any of his writings would imagine that any question of the "consistency of Christianity with science" ever occurred to him; nor can there be the least doubt that More attributed a "sacerdotal sense" to the Christian priesthood. In so thinking he may of course have been bigoted and ignorant, but he can hardly be said to deserve an undenominationalist's eulogy. Indeed, all such arguments, both on the religion and on the philosophy of the Utopians, are based on an inference which, whether just or not, More himself never draws. For instance, it has been said that the Utopians "recognized, as Mr. Mill urges that Christians ought to do now, 'in the golden rule of Jesus of Nazareth the complete spirit of the ethics of utility.'"<sup>1</sup> Now the passage which is alluded to refers unquestionably to the views of the Utopians before their conversion to Christianity, and therefore cannot prove any connexion between their philosophy and the revelation of Christ. It is, of course, open to any one to say that their conversion would have made no change in their philosophic opinions, but it is hardly permissible to take the point for granted. It must indeed be admitted that throughout his book Mr. Seebohm, while he rightly lays stress on the agreement between the views of Colet, Erasmus, and More, seems to exaggerate the freedom of their opinions. One instance of their cordial acceptance of views which we are accustomed to regard as especially medieval will suffice. The question of ecclesiastical privilege may be regarded as a typical one. In England at least the claim to exemption from civil jurisdiction had always been warmly contested, and the progress of the Reformation pronounced more and more decisively against it. But More, even in his Utopia, uses the strongest arguments in its favour, while Colet, in his famous sermon before the Convocation of 1512,<sup>1</sup> expressly declared it to be just. The “Oxford reformers” were indeed liberal, tolerant, and pious beyond the standard of their time, but in doctrine they firmly maintained the principles of the Catholic Church. Colet did not live to express an opinion on the great movements of the foreign reformers; Erasmus, after hesitating for a while, opposed them; More strongly and decisively condemned their whole position.

<sup>1</sup> Oxford Reformers, pp. 355 sqq.

<sup>2</sup> Latin Works, Louvain, 1555, p. 17a. Translated by Ralph Robinson, "They think that the contemplation of nature and the praise thereof coming is to God a very acceptable honour" (Arber's reprint, p. 149).

<sup>1</sup> The Oxford Reformers, 1st edition, p. 286.

Before he was forced into the arena of theological controversy More had begun to write a short devotional treatise of great value on the text Memorare novissima, et in aeternum non peccabis.<sup>2</sup> The book, which is almost unknown, is well worthy to be reprinted: it is exceedingly interesting, not only as an illustration of the sincerity and beauty of More's character, but also as an example of the highest standard of Catholic devotion immediately before the Reformation. The title names it a “treatysse (unfynysshed) upon these wordes of Holye Scrypture, Memorare nouissima, et in eternum non peccabis, ‘Remember the last thynges, and thou shalt neuer synne,’” and adds that it was “made about the yere of our Lorde 1522.” The interest which attaches to the few pages lies not only in the quaint and peculiar style in which the deepest thoughts are with all sincerity expressed, but also in the period at which they were written. In 1522 More was on the point of making that choice between politics and literature which has come to so many great men at the crisis of their lives. He was already famous in Europe as a scholar, as a writer of brilliant epigrams, as the author of a book of which every one was still speaking, which had run through three editions in a year, and which had put forth such keen criticism of the age and such bold schemes for reformation. "What might not this great genius have accomplished," said Erasmus, "had he been educated in Italy, or were he not being overwhelmed by political and domestic cares?" More had already performed several important diplomatic missions, and was gradually more and more sought after by the King, whose offers he had at first steadily refused. He had assisted him in his book against Luther; he was probably already preparing his own reply to that heretic, which was published in the next year. He was in almost daily correspondence with Wolsey. A great political career seemed open to him.

<sup>1</sup> Given in The Oxford Reformers.

<sup>2</sup> English Works, 1557, pp. 72–102. The treatise is unfinished.

It was at such a time that More deliberately turned his thoughts to the most solemn of all matters, Memorare novissima, et in aeternum non peccabis. The little meditation, as we should call it, which he wrote on this text, evidently came freely and sincerely from his heart. It is the ready humour, playing even round subjects the most tremendous that man can contemplate, that gives it distinction and freshness. Not seldom does the treatment, and sometimes even the style, remind us of Jeremy Taylor, for the quaint incongruity which admits "the Ephesian woman that the soldier told of in Petronius" to a share in our thoughts at the very moment when we are preparing the bodies of our friends for the grave, has its parallel again and again in the thirty pages of More's little work. In other ways the writing recalls the dignity of Hooker and the tenderness of George Herbert. It is a model of clear and expressive English. The subject itself may have been suggested by the Cordiall de Quatuor Novissimis, attributed to Henricus de Hassia, of which an English version by Anthony Wydville, Earl Rivers, had been printed by Caxton; but the matter is entirely original.

The scheme was not completed—we have indeed not finished the consideration of the least terrible of the Four Last Things—when the meditation suddenly breaks off. Yet there is enough to show on what practical lines the religion of the great lawyer and humanist ran, and how much there was in the devotion of the Catholic Church in our land on the eve of the Reformation which, in modern phrase, was thoroughly Anglican in temper. The book, indeed, might have been written by an English writer, not of the Puritanical school, either before or after the Reformation, and is a striking instance of how little our devotional standards are modelled upon foreign examples, and how distinct a style the mental attitude of our own race has contributed to the devotional treasury of the universal Church. This is well illustrated also by a comparison with that earlier religious work of More's own—his translation of Gian Francesco's biography of Pico della Mirandola, with its devotional letters and verses, which contain such a touching picture of the deep religious earnestness of the fascinating hero.

More, it is plain to see, had been profoundly influenced by the Renaissance spirit in general and by the beautiful soul of Pico in particular. Yet his meditation on the Four Last Things, which might bear for a motto the last words of the dying humanist to his nephew, is in literary tone and style utterly unlike anything that the Italian mystic left behind. The treatise indeed is as thoroughly English in its manner as it is in its matter; it is truly a work of English literature as well as of English religion.

The thought of death, so he begins, is a sovereign medicine for the soul's diseases—

“The phisicion sendeth his bill to the poticary, and therin writeth sommetyme a costlye receite of many straunge herbes and rootes, set out of far countreis, long lien drugges, al the strength worn out, and some none such to be gotten. But thys phisicion sendeth his bill to thyselfe, no strange thing therein, nothing costly to bie, nothing farre to set, but to be gathered at times of the yere in the gardein of thyne owne soule.”

It is no doubt a bitter and painful medicine, yet this should in no way dissuade us from its use—

“Nowe yf a manne bee so daynty stomaked, that, goyng where contagion is, he would grudge to take a lyttle tryacle, yet were he very nyeely wanton if he might not at the lestwise take a little vynegre and rose water in his handkercher."

Pleasure, indeed, stands in the way of solemn thoughts; yet how much superior is spiritual to worldly delight! And a joy in spiritual exercises is of all things the best preventive of sin. But here the chief end of the Christian life, it will be argued, is not attained—

"Thou wilt happily say, that it is not ynoch that a man do none euyl, but he must also do good. This is verye truth that ye say. But first if ther be but these two steppes to heaven, he that getteth him on the one is halfe up. And over it, who so doeth none euil, it will be very hard but he must nedes do good, syth man's mind is neuer ydle, but occupied commonly either with good or euil."

Let the mind ever be occupied with good thoughts or with good speech, and yet not ever babbling. There is a "Time to speke and time to keep thy tong. Whansoever y<sup>e</sup> communicacion is nought and ungodly, it is better to holde thy tong and think on some better thing the while, than to giue ear thereto and underpinne the tale. And yet better were it then holdynge of thy tong properly to speake, and with som good grace and pleasant fashion to break into some better matter. By which thy speache and talking thou shalt not onely profite thyselfe as thou sholdest have done by thy well-minded sylence, but also amend the whole audience, which is a thyng farre better and of much more merite. Howbeit, if thou can find no proper meane to break the tale, than excepte thy bare authoritie suffice to commaunde silence, it were paraventure good rather to keep a good silence thyself, than blunt forth rudely and yrryte them to anger, which shall happily therefore not let to talk on, but speake much the more, lest thei should seme to lene at thy commandement. And better were it for y<sup>e</sup> while to let one wanton worde pass uncontrolled than geue occasyon of twain."

But to join in good conversation is far better than silence, for to sit in meditation till folk suddenly say, "A penny for your thought," is neither wisdom nor good manners.

So far More has spoken by way of introduction. He then turns to the remembrance of death. He begins by drawing the awful moment in all its terrors. "Never were we so greatly moved," he says, "by the beholding of the daunce of death pictured in Poules," as by imagining of the hour itself. Imagination can with readiness call up the pains of the very easiest death in bed—

"Thy hed shooting, thy backe akyng, thy vaynes beating, thine heart panting, thy throte ratelyng, thy fleshe trembling, thy mouthe gaping, thy nose sharping, thy legges coling, thy fingers fimbling, thy breath shorting, all thy strength fainting, thy lyfe vanishing, and thy death drawyng on."

There are few more vividly realistic descriptions in the English language than that which follows on this passage. As the dying man lies helpless in bed, friends and executors flock round him troubling him with questions he has no strength to answer; children lament; and the wife (it is a sudden touch of almost coarse irony), who before spoke not one sweet word in six weeks, now weeps, not without an eye to the future. And all the while the devil is never absent from him that draws towards the end; for at death the final destiny is fixed, and afterwards no change can touch the salvation or the loss of the soul. Temptations throng around, be it through a false hope of life or a false security of salvation "as a thing well won by our own works." So instead of sorrow for sin the enemy of the soul

"putteth us in mind of provision for some honourable burying, so many torches, so many tapers, so many black gownes, so many merry mourners laughing under black hodes, and a gay hers, with the delite of goodly and honorable funeralles, in which the folish sicke man is sometyme occupied, as though he thought that he should stand in a window and see how worshipfullie he shall be broughte to church."

There is a false feeling of security which buoys up both old and young for a while. There is no man so old, "as Tully saith," but he expects to live a year longer. The young think not upon those dead younger than themselves, but measure their own prospects of life by the age of the oldest man they know. Sickness is a preparation for death, but it is not a preparation that all obtain. And in a sense all life is a sickness, and so all life should be a preparation.

The thought of death is then taken as a medicine for many diseases of the soul. Pride, the "mother of all vice," stands first, and next ambition, which tricks out a man in borrowed robes like those of the actor who, after playing a great lord on the stage, goes out again "a knave in his red coat." Envy and wrath, too, are vices for which the contemplation of death is a meet cure. At the root of all these sins lies our self-exaltation—

"By which, though we marke it not, yet indeede we recken our selfe worthye more reuerence than we do God Himselfe. . . . Loke not whether we be not more angry with our seruantes for the brech of one commaundement of our owne than for the breeche of God's al tenne, and whether we be not more wroth with one contumelious worde spoken against ourself than with many blasphemous wordes unreuerently spoken of God."

Behind the wrath which blazes out on trivial occasion lies the cardinal vice of pride—

"Now shal ye see men fall at varyance for kissyng of the pax, or goyng before in procession, or setting of their wives' pewes in the church. Doubt ye whether this wrath be pride? I dout not but wise men will agree that it is either foolyshe pride or proud foly."

And so in the same strain he speaks of "covetise" and "glotony." Of the vice of intemperance he says much that is forcible and pointed, and there is ever in his keenest sayings a deep spiritual earnestness and a true sympathy with tempted souls. Enough is quoted to show the style of his work, but yet it reads far better as it was written than in fragmentary extracts. Standing alone, it might only deserve notice for its quaintnesses, but when it is considered in connexion with the other religious writings of the author—such as the Treatise on the Passion, the Book of Comfort in Tribulation, and the private prayers—it will be seen to be worthy of remembrance as a touching and characteristic work of one of the purest and most single-hearted of England's worthies. Unfortunately More's theological studies could not be confined to such devotional exercises; he was led into religious controversy, as he was led into politics, by the King.

As early as 1518, Henry VIII. had been preparing a book, which was probably a theological disputation, entitled "Whether a Layman is bound to Vocal Prayer."<sup>1</sup> It was natural that Pace and More should be frequently consulted during the progress of this work, but it does not appear that they took any actual part in the authorship,<sup>2</sup> their aid at most extending to the composition and the correction of the Latin style. Of a conversation which he had with the King at this time More has left a curious record.<sup>3</sup>

"I was myself" [he says] "sometime not of the mind that the primacy of the [Roman] see should be begun by the institution of God, until I read in the matter those things that the king's highness had written in his most famous book against the heresies of Martin Luther. At the first reading whereof I moved the king's highness either to leave out that point or else to touch it more slenderly, for doubt of such thing as after might hap to fall in question between his highness and some pope, as between princes and popes divers times have done. Whereunto his highness answered me that he would in no wise anything minish of that matter, of which thing his highness showed me a secret cause, whereof I never had anything heard before. But surely after I had read his grace's book thereon, and so many other things as I have seen in that point of the controversy of this ten<sup>1</sup> years since and more, I have found a general consent of fathers and councils agreeing in that point."

<sup>1</sup> See Fr. Bridgett, The Defender of the Faith, p. 13.

<sup>2</sup> More stated that he was only "a sorter out and placer of the principal matters therein contained."—Roper, Life of More (Pitt Press ed. p. 37).

<sup>3</sup> Letter to Cromwell, English Works, the two pages both numbered by mistake 1427. Cf. Roper, pp. 37, 38.

It is evident, then, that the opinion for which More died was first instilled into him by the King by whose orders he was executed. A very important question arises from this statement of his as to what may have been the "secret matter" which induced Henry VIII. in his book against Luther so strongly to support the Papal supremacy, and which, when declared to More, who was before incredulous of the Papal claim, convinced him of its importance and finally made a "Romanist" of him. Mr. Seebom has suggested<sup>2</sup> that the secret was that the marriage between Arthur and Katherine had been consummated. Thus in view of the succession of the Princess Mary or of any child that the King might have by Katherine, and of the social position of others married in the same way, More would feel with overpowering force the necessity of maintaining the Papal authority in granting dispensations and the other powers of the holy see which required a similar belief in the supremacy for their basis. The conjecture is ingenious, but is open to obvious objections. As, however, it is quite impossible to discover with certainty what the "secret matter" may have been, the subject need be no further alluded to here.

<sup>1</sup> "Seven" in More's Works, but "ten" in the original.

<sup>2</sup> Fortnightly Review, ix. 508, 599.

Henry's book won him the title of "defender of the faith," and exposed him to an answer from Luther which no one denies to be violent and indecent to the last degree. Seeing the King thus attacked, More was moved to take up the cudgels in his defence, writing, says his great-grandson,<sup>1</sup> in accordance with the precept Responde stulto secundum stultitiam ejus, and with such effect that his worthy descendant considers that "to see how he handleth Luther would do any man good."<sup>2</sup> His Vindicatio Henrici VIII a calumniis Lutheri, published under the name of "Gulielmus Rosseus," appeared in 1523.<sup>3</sup> Though there has been some question, there can be no real doubt, of the authorship. The style in all its good points is eminently characteristic of More, but it is unfortunately quite foreign in tone to what we should have expected from his mild and beautiful nature. It is sad that he should have descended to coarse and scurrilous jesting, and have made no attempt to raise the tone of the controversy into which he had flung himself. With all Luther's horror of monastic degradation and longing for reform he could fully sympathize; but he was aroused by the same feelings to amend rather than to destroy. It was the coarseness of the attacks upon all which he held dear that moved him to write; Savonarola he could have followed, but not Luther. The whole attitude, indeed, of More towards the Reformation may be very largely, though not entirely, explained by his mental constitution. A disposition such as his, in which the feelings of charity and veneration were so prominent, could not easily lend itself to the iconoclastic vehemence in which the energy of Luther took refuge, and which demanded of necessity a harsh rending of old ties and a cruel treatment of even honest opponents. When More answered the reformers in their own strain he was simply using the weapon which they had proved to be effective, but his conduct is none the less to be regretted. It may, however, be said that his controversial works show that he put some restraint upon himself, while there is no sign that Luther ever did so. Nor should the spirit in which More wrote be forgotten. He says with much feeling at the end of this work—

<sup>1</sup> Cresacre More, Life of Sir Thomas More, ed. 1726, p. 311.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 110.

<sup>3</sup> It is published in the Latin Works, ed. 1565, pp. 57—117.

“ Imo nihil mihi magis in votis est quam ut illam aliquando diem videam, qua et has nugas meas et illius omnes insanias haereses mortales omnes abjiciant; ut obruto pessimarum rerum studio, sepultis jurgiorum stimulis et contentionum obliterata memoria, illuccescat animis serenum fidei lumen: redeat sincera pietas et vere christiana concordia: quam

aliquando precor, ut reddat, ac restituat terræ, Qui in terram venit pacem daturus e coelo.”<sup>1</sup>

It is not surprising that More, like so many other opponents of the reformers, blamed Luther and his followers for the excesses of the Bauernkrieg of 1525. In that year Bugenhagen, then newly converted to the Lutheran opinions, addressed his letter “to the saints in England,” and More, who heard all the most terrible stories of the peasants’ excesses from Goclenius, thought it necessary to reply to it. Here, however, he had no desire to enter into public controversy; his letter was entirely private,<sup>2</sup> and was written in a most conciliatory tone. He took pains to refute the Antinomian opinions of the Anabaptists, which he attributed to Luther, and called attention to much in the writings of the Wittenberg doctor which it seemed impossible to reconcile with any reasonable standard of theology. From such violence of opinion and expression he thought that the revolts and massacres were legitimate deductions. He was at pains also to point out that the true Catholic doctrines were misrepresented by the reformers, and instanced the famous point of justification by faith.

“The Church both believes and teaches that man’s works cannot be well done without the grace of God, or be of any merit without faith in Christ. Nor are they, even in that case, in their nature fit for heaven. When we have done all, we are unprofitable servants, we have done no more than we ought to have done. We do not fight against grace or deny Christ, or confide, like the Pharisees, in works; for we know well that they are worth nothing without faith, that they have no value except from the pure bounty of God. But they fight against faith and deny Christ, who, while they extol only grace and faith, deny the value of faith and make men callous to living well.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Latin Works, p. 118a.

<sup>2</sup> Mori epistola in qua non minus facete quam pie respondet litteris Johannis Pomerani. Louvain. It was not published till 1568.

Nothing, surely, could be more sound than this statement, and a comparison with the thirteenth article of the Church of England is immediately suggested. From such passages we are encouraged to inquire what More’s position would have been if he had lived a little later. Mr. Froude assures us that “his mind was too clear and genuine to allow him to deceive himself with the delusive mirage of Anglicanism.” Rather, in one sense More was Anglican, while in another sense ‘Anglicanism’ was never placed before him. And, in spite of the vehemence with which he defended some of the more especially medieval doctrines, it is interesting to notice several occasions on which he clearly held and expressed the views of primitive Christianity as they have been expounded by Anglican theologians since the Reformation.

<sup>1</sup> I use the translation of this passage given in an article in the North British Review, vol. xxx. pp. 102 sqq., to which I am much indebted. I believe that Mr. Seebold has somewhere admitted the authorship of this article. If so, our regret must be the greater that he has not given us a complete life of More.

The progress of events soon brought More forward again as a controversialist, and in 1528 he assumed the position, which he maintained almost until his death, of the most prominent defender of the Church against the attacks of the English reformers. The writings of the heretics had been largely disseminated in England, and it was felt that some stronger weapon than the law afforded was necessary for general use. More, as a layman whose tolerant views were well known and whose literary fame was European, was admirably fitted to meet the pamphleteers on their own ground. Accordingly, in March 1528, Tunstal entreated him to come forward as the defender of the Church, and sent him a formal license "to read and keep certain books of Luther and certain other heretical publications," in order that he might write an answer to them in the vernacular tongue.<sup>1</sup> More at once applied himself to the study of the volumes, and was not long in discovering that side by side with Luther as a powerful antagonist of the Church he must place William Tyndale, the translator of the New Testament and author of The Wicked Mammon, and The Obedience of a Christian Man. The result of his reading was the publication of 'A Dialogue of Sir Thomas More, Knight; one of the Counsaill of our Sovereign Lord the Kinge, and Chancellour of his duchy of Lancaster. Wherein be treated divers maters, as of the veneracion and worship of ymages and relyques, praing to Saintes, and goying on pylgrimage. With many other thinges touchyng the pestilente secte of Luther and Tyndale, by the tone bygone in Saxony and by the tother labored to be brought into England.<sup>1</sup> This was a work of remarkable skill, and has always been considered by Roman writers to be More's greatest achievement. It must in justice be admitted that the questions discussed are treated with ability and tact, and in a much more moderate tone than was usual in the controversies of the time. The method of the book was admirably chosen. It professes to be a dialogue on the great questions of the day between More and a messenger from one of his friends who was imbued with many of the opinions of the reformers. The objections of the heretics are brought forward with some force and are met with every artifice of ridicule and illustration as well as of sober argument. Thus the simplicity of the reformer who considers "logic but babbling, music to serve for singers, arithmetic meet for merchants, geometry for masons, astronomy good for no man, and as for philosophy, the most vain of all,"<sup>2</sup> and knows nothing but a little Latin and the Bible, is sketched with delightful humour. Turning to argument, More cites a number of examples to prove that images were not forbidden to Christians. In attempting a dilemma as to the reverence to be paid to the name of Jesus, More seems as oblivious of logic as his opponent, but with regard to the veneration of saints he is more straightforward.

<sup>1</sup> Letters and Papers, iv. 4028.

"Well they [the heretics] wot that the Church

<sup>1</sup> First edition, 1529. English Works, ed. 1557, pp. 104—228.

<sup>2</sup> "Dialogue," English Works, p. 111.

worshippeth not saints as God, but as God's good servants, and therefore the honour that is done to them redoundeth principally to the honour of their Master, like as in common custom of people we do reverence sometimes, and make great cheer to some men for their master's sake whom else would we not haply bid once good-morrow.”<sup>1</sup>

Speaking of pilgrimages he denies that they are maintained because they are a source of revenue to the clergy, and defends the consecration of special places for God's service.

“Where ye say that in resorting to this place and that place, this image and that image, we seem to reckon as though God were not in every place alike mighty or not alike present, this reason [he says] proceedeth no more against pilgrimages than against all the churches in Christendom; for God is as mighty in the stable as in the temple.”<sup>2</sup>

He thus narrows down the question to a point, the decision of which does not affect the question that he is supposed to answer. Because God had set apart certain places to be hallowed to Him, and ordered men to assemble together to worship Him, it did not follow that prayers “should be better heard of our Lord in Kent than at Cambridge.”

For the proof that special localities are more pleasing to God than others, More relies on the evidence of miracles. This introduces several very interesting chapters in which he meets the arguments against the possibility of miraculous manifestations. Into this subject he enters at great length and with much skill, distinguishing between a belief in miracles in general and the evidence for particular cases. While admitting that the devil can work miracles, he declares that if the Church had acknowledged such the Holy Spirit would have deserted her. The rest of the first book explains and defends at great length the doctrine of the Church and of her interpretation of the Holy Scripture. On this latter point More maintains that the Church cannot err on any necessary article of the faith, and arrives at the following conclusion—

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 118.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 121.

“ Whoso will not unto the study of Scripture take the points of the Catholic faith as a rule of interpretation, but of diffidence and mistrust study to seek in Scripture whether the faith of the Church be true or not, he cannot fail to fall in worse errors and far more jeopardous than any man can do by philosophy, whereof the reasons and arguments in matters of our faith have nothing in like authority.”<sup>1</sup>

In the second book the subject of the Church is continued. What, asks the objector, is the Visible Church? More replies that it must be open and obvious, a city set on an hill that cannot be hid; no sect can be the Church, for the Church existed before them all, the tree from which they, as withered branches, dropped. The Church also must contain good and bad men together, and is, in fact, “ the common known multitude of Christian nations not cut off nor fallen off by heresies.”<sup>2</sup> The subject of the views of the reformers is then again introduced; for the objector asks why, if the good and bad be together in the Church, the good may not be those who believe the worship of images to be idolatry. More then defends in turn the invocation of saints, the reverence paid to reliques, and pilgrimages. The canonized saints must be saints indeed, or the Church would have erred in a matter nearly touching God's honour, which cannot be. To the objector's complaints about reliques it is answered that the Church could not have received pig's bones, or the bones of the damned, as worthy of reverence, for she is guided by the same Spirit through whom the Canon of Scripture was chosen. And, even if God permitted a mistake to be undiscovered for a while, no harm would happen, for the intention of those that pay reverence is good, as though there could be no harm in paying reverence to an unconsecrated host. (Nor do the bad customs that disgrace some shrines prove that the shrines themselves should be destroyed any more than that holy days should be abolished because in some places foolish or wicked deeds are done on them. "In some countries they go a-hunting on Good Friday in the morning: will ye break that evil custom, or cast away Good Friday?"<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 163.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 185.

More begins the third book of his dialogue by deciding the question whether belief is to be accorded first to the Scripture or to the Church. He declares that faith is before Scripture, as well chronologically as logically. The trial and abjuration of Bilney are then described, and the burning of Tyndale's New Testament is praised. More's criticism of the reformer's translation is extremely bitter. He distrusts the spirit in which it was undertaken, and points out many instances in which new renderings of words have been adopted for the purpose of concealing the meaning of the original. His deepest anger is reserved for the change by which "priest" becomes "senior," "the Church," "the congregation," and "charity," "love." Nor was this all, "for he changeth," cries More, "grace into this word 'favour,' whereas every favour is not grace in English, for in some favour there is little grace. 'Confession' he translateth into 'knowledging,' 'penance' into 'repentance.' 'A contrite heart' he changeth into 'a troubled heart,' and many more things like and many texts untruly translated for the maintenance of heresy."<sup>1</sup> Of Tyndale's other works More also speaks in strong condemnation. "Tyndale," he says, "hath put out in his own name another book entitled Mammona, which book is very mammona iniquitatis, a very treasury and well-spring of wickedness. And yet hath he sithence put forth a worse also named The Obedience of a Christian Man, a book able to make a Christian man that would believe it leave off all good Christian virtues, and lose the merits of his Christendom."<sup>2</sup> Turning then to the attacks made upon the priesthood, More says much in answer that is fair and just. He could not deny that many of the clergy lived scandalous lives, but he attributed that to episcopal neglect of the canon that none should be ordained for whom provision was not made. He also reminded the objector how eagerly every one caught up tales against any particular priest, and straightway condemned the order. If priests were bad, how much worse were laymen! And he quoted a sermon of Colet to the same effect.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 198.

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 222.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 223.

On the marriage of the clergy he has an important chapter, in which his argument is that the Church binds no man to chastity against his will, for men only take sacred orders by their own desire. "And as touching whether the order of the Church therein is better than the contrary, good men and wise men both had the proof of both before the law was made, and it was well allowed through Christendom long time since. Which ere I would assent to change I would see a better author thereof than such an heretic as Luther and Tyndale, and a better sample than the seditious and schismatic priests of Saxony."<sup>2</sup> This position, it will be observed, though not extreme, is quite incompatible with a belief that the Utopia was intended to advise the marriage of priests.

More recognizes the wisdom of having the Bible translated, though he says much of the danger of an unauthorized translation. Yet how narrow was the liberty that he would concede may be seen by the following passage—

"It might be with diligence well and truly translated by some good Catholic and well-learned man, or by divers dividing the labour among them, and after conferring their several parts together, each with other. And after that might the work be allowed and approved by the ordinaries, and by their authorities so put into print as all the copies should come whole into the bishop's hand. Which he may after his discretion and wisdom deliver to such as he perceiveth honest, sad, and virtuous, with a good monition and fatherly counsel to use it reverently with humble heart and lowly mind, rather seeking therein occasion of devotion than of despicion. And providing as much as may be that the book be after the decease of the party brought again and reverently restored under the ordinary.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 226.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 233.

The fourth book contains a violent attack upon Luther and his followers, a repetition, with all the force of More's ability, of the charges to which they had long been exposed. Speaking of the burning of heretics, More lays great stress on the fact that it is the work of the secular power, and declares that just as princes are bound to resist the Turks, so are they bound to destroy heretics who reject all the offers of the long-suffering Church. With this, the conversion of the objector being complete, More departs to the Court.

Such is a most imperfect sketch of the contents of the Dialogue. From a perusal of it, it becomes evident that any attempt to represent the author as satisfied with a latitudinarian or even a purely spiritual creed must break down. There is no reason to assume that More's views had changed since he wrote the Utopia, and the distinct declaration of them in his controversial works seems to prove that no importance is to be attached to the ideal picture of religion in the happy island. It is equally plain that More was well aware of the strength of the reformers, that he had clearly grasped many of their arguments and decisively rejected their whole teaching. It is at least possible also that he saw much of the weakness of his own cause; the significant changes of style and the absence of even casual allusion to points of extreme importance seem to suggest this conclusion. From this work also an opinion may be formed as to the extent of More's theological knowledge. The Dialogue is most evidently the work of a layman, who had a taste for but had made no special study of divinity. It owes all to its skill, nothing to its learning. More was a lawyer, not a theologian. He knew some of the works of S. Augustine, Peter Lombard, and the Canon Law. As a lawyer he accepted, indeed he could not dispute, the mass of forgeries which then passed for genuine writings of the first ages of the Church. The strength of More's books lay in the popular ground which they took up; they were almost the only works which attempted to answer the reformers after their own fashion. Fresh, unforced humour is visible on nearly every page. Surely it is a special touch of English religious writers that they blend delightful mirth with their serious thought. What is true of Hooker and Jeremy Taylor and George Herbert and William Law, is doubly true of Sir Thomas More. Some extracts I cannot refrain from quoting. The following has additional interest from its autobiographical reference—

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 245.

“If he mean to read his riddle on this fashion, then he soyleth his strange riddle as bluntly as an old wife of Culnaw (? Cumnor) did once among the scholars of Oxenford that sojourned with her for death [in the time of the plague]. Which, while they were on a time for their sport purposing riddles among them, she began to put forth one of her's too, and said, 'A read my riddle, what is that? I knew one that shot at a hart and killed a haddock.' And when we had everybody much mused how that might be and then prayed her to declare her riddle herself, after long request, she said at the last that there were once a fisher that came a land in a place where he saw a hart and shot thereat, but he hit it not; and afterwards he went again to the sea and caught a haddock and killed it."

No less quaint is the story of Davy the Dutchman, who was about to marry a second time, when it was discovered that his first wife was still alive—

“‘Marry, master,’ quoth he, ‘that letter saith, me-think, that my wife is alive.’ ‘Yea, beast,’ quoth I, ‘that she is.’ ‘Marry,’ quoth he, ‘then I am well apaid, for she is a good woman.’ ‘Yea,’ quoth I, ‘but why art thou such a naughty, wretched man, that thou wouldest here wed another? Didst thou not say she was dead?’ ‘Yes, marry,’ quoth he, ‘men of Worcester told me so.’ ‘Why,’ quoth I, ‘thou false beast, did’st thou not tell me and all my house that thou wert at her grave thyself?’ ‘Yea, marry, master,’ quoth he, ‘so I was, but I could not look in, ye wot well.’”

Such passages abound in his writings, as do quaint saws and old proverbs, many of which are still in use. Nor are passages of genuine eloquence and deep solemnity wanting. More's style was indeed the mirror of the man; he wrote as he lived, absolutely without ostentation, simply, merrily, honourably and in the true faith and fear of Christ. In such a passage as this he touches the true note of genuine devotion—

“When we feel us too bold, remember our own feebleness. When we feel us too faint, remember Christ's strength. In our fear, let us remember Christ's painful agony that Himself would (for our comfort) suffer before His passion, to the intent that no fear should make us despair. And ever call for His help, such as Himself list to send us, and then need we never to doubt but that either He shall keep us from the painful death, or shall not fail so to strength us in it that He shall joyfully bring us to heaven by it. And then does He much more for us than if He kept us from it. For as God did more for poor Lazar in helping him patiently to die for hunger at the rich man's door, than if He had brought him to the door all the rich glutton's dinner; so, though He be gracious to a man whom He delivereth out of painful trouble, yet doth He much more for a man if through right painful death He deliver him from this wretched world into eternal bliss.”

Passages such as these—and More's works are full of them—show how close to him always was the divine beauty of the spiritual life.

It was evident that the controversy would not cease with the publication of the Dialogue. Tyndale, then in safety in the Netherlands, was anxious to meet it, but while he was preparing to do so More entered into a new contest. On May 24, 1530, the Council, by the King's command, issued a declaration against Luther's writings, and a list of the errors contained in certain heretical books, English and Latin, among others Tyndale's translation of the Scriptures, for the benefit of preachers, to be published by them in their sermons. It had been drawn up by Warham, Tunstal, More, Gardiner, Hugh Latimer, and others. Meanwhile a tract had been published, probably at the same time as the Dialogue, which took up with considerable force a peculiar mode of attack. The Supplication for the Beggars struck at the Church through the clergy. In language of extreme violence "the foul, unhappy sort of lepers and other sore people, needy, impotent, blind, lame, and sick, that live only on alms," petition the King to grant them succour. They declare that they are dying of hunger because of the multitude of stout and strong beggars, the clergy, who possess more than a third part of the kingdom, and obtain by their numberless exactions more than £40,000 a year in addition to the tithes. They demand that "these sturdy lobies" and "holy idle thieves" be driven abroad into the world, "to get them wives of their own, to get their living with their labour in the sweat of their faces, according to the commandment of God," and that they should be "tied to the carts to be whipped naked about every market town till they will fall to labour."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> A Supplication for the Beggars, by Simon Fish, reprinted by Mr. Arber, 1878.

Mr. Dixon speaks of More as "condescending" to answer the "atrocities" of Simon Fish.<sup>1</sup> The expression is scarcely too strong; the work was indeed far below the level of those which he had previously attacked, and it was only the knowledge that its very vehemence would win it credit among a certain class that induced him to notice it. His answer was written in a very different tone. It took the form of a pathetic appeal from "the poor prisoners of God," the souls in purgatory, "to all good Christian people."<sup>2</sup> The Supplication of Souls is in every way more interesting than the Dialogue. In exposing the extravagant follies of such a work as that of Fish, More is at his best, clear, trenchant, and exhaustive, and not only does he completely defeat his adversary—which he can hardly be said to have done in the Dialogue—but it is possible to feel a certain satisfaction in his victory. The exquisite humour of the first part will scarce admit of detached quotation, since it owes its success to the accuracy with which, while following closely the steps of its original, it ridicules and exposes its statements. The elaborate calculations of the "beggars" are entirely upset. More points out the inconsistency of declaring in one place that the clergy are so many as to check the growth of population and prevent a proper supply of merchants and soldiers, and in another that they are not one in every four hundred of the population, that they are the cause of the increase of beggary, and yet that they should be turned adrift to diminish the number of beggars. There are several other features of interest in the book, such as the remarks on Peter's pence and King John's gift of the kingdom to the Pope, and the prophecy that any robbing of the Church would be followed by a great increase of pauperism. The doctrine of purgatory is introduced by the consideration that the majority of religious establishments were endowed for the express purpose of insuring supplication for the souls of the founders. Thus More declares that the confiscation of the endowments would be not only an injury to the living, but a most grievous cruelty to the dead. Into his arguments in defence of the doctrine it is unnecessary to enter. He fights, not without effect, by confusing the intermediate state with a state of torment, by lavish reference to the Church's authority, and by incorrect accounts of the belief of early Christianity. Yet there is a pathos worthy of the writer in the passage where the suffering souls plead their membership in the Catholic Church, their claim on the prayers of the faithful, and their right to the compassion which by their benefactions they had shown to those on earth.

<sup>1</sup> History of the Church of England, i. 142.

<sup>2</sup> "A Supplication of Souls," English Works, pp. 288—339.

At this point in More's life he was brought into active personal relation to heretics by his duties as Lord Chancellor.

That he had frequently attended the examination of heretics is proved by several passages in the Dialogue: it was not, however, until his appointment as Lord Chancellor that his official duties obliged him to do so. As Chancellor he took the oath "to use all his power to destroy all manner of heresies.”<sup>1</sup> It was one of his duties to the discharge of which he could give himself with much sympathy; but we should be surprised to discover that he used with harshness or violence the power committed to him. His conduct, however, in all that relates to heresy has been the subject of such vehement attacks from Protestant writers, that an impression has arisen that he at this period belied the promise of his past life and became a relentless persecutor. Wolsey’s mildness has almost universally been contrasted with More’s severity; and, while it has been commonly supposed that the latter exercised the duties of his office with stern rigour, Mr. Froude has gone so far as to accuse him of distinctly illegal acts. A closer examination, however, seems to show that not only did he keep strictly within the limits of his duty, and do no more than he was legally bound to do, but that he took especial pains—and for some time successfully—to avoid the infliction of the extreme penalty. Mr. Froude, after dwelling on the illegal imprisonments which followed Wolsey’s resignation, declares that “no sooner had the seals changed hands than the Smithfield fires recommenced.”<sup>2</sup> It appears, rather, that not only were the imprisonments to which the Protestants were subjected the strictly legal acts of the bishops rather than of the Chancellor, but that for nearly two years after More’s appointment—and he did not hold his office three years—there was no infliction of the extreme penalty.

<sup>1</sup> 2 Henry V. stat. 1: see also Proclamation of 1527, Foxe, ed. 1597, p. 930.

<sup>2</sup> Hist. England, vol. ii. p. 83.

The law provided that if a heretic, arrested and examined by the bishops, refused to recant, he should be burnt. The decision once made, and sentence passed, the end could not be avoided. But by the proclamation of 1529 power was given to the bishops to imprison, at their discretion, both before and after conviction. Thus to More in the execution of his office the only escape from his clear legal obligation to destroy the heretics was by advising the bishops to use the power committed to them. By the exercise of this power many were saved who must otherwise have been burned; and there can be little doubt that those whose petitions to the Crown after More's resignation have caused much of the blame that has been attached to him, would, but for his intervention, have suffered death.

It may be well to notice the cases of those who were burned during More's Chancellorship and of those who were, according to Mr. Froude, illegally imprisoned, and the accusations of personal cruelty alleged by Foxe against the Chancellor.

It was not till within the last nine months of his tenure of the seals that any execution took place. Bilney, Bayfield, Tewkesbury, and Bainham, who had previously abjured, relapsed into heresy. In such cases the law was explicit. The Chancellor had no power to save. He was forced to issue the writ ordered by the statute De Hacretico Comburendo; and he can with no more justice be considered responsible for the law he carried out than the many judges who in this century condemned men to death for forgery and theft. He is thus without doubt legally absolved. The stories of his cruelty to these prisoners rest only on the unreliable assertions of Foxe; and there can be no higher testimony to his personal conduct than that afforded by the martyrs themselves, who died with such prayers on their lips as "May the Lord open the eyes of Sir Thomas More!"

The two cases of the Chancellor's illegal action quoted by Mr. Froude are those of Thomas Philips and John Field.<sup>1</sup> The only evidence for the first is the petition of the sufferer, and even there Sir Thomas is not mentioned except as issuing the warrant for his arrest, and as examining him from time to time, in conjunction with the Bishop of London. The whole responsibility lies upon the Bishop; and the proclamation of 1529 gave him his authority. Mr. Froude has not thought it necessary to notice More's own account of the matter, which bears the strongest marks of truth. "When," wrote Sir Thomas,<sup>2</sup> "I had spoken with Philips [on first sending for him] and honestly entreated him one day or twain in mine house, and laboured about his amendment in as hearty, loving wise as I could: when I perceived finally the person such that I could find no truth, neither in his word nor in his oath, and saw the likelihood that he was in the setting forth of such heresies a man meet to do many folk much harm, I by indenture delivered him to his ordinary." After explaining how the prisoner was transferred to the Tower, he adds, "and yet after that he complained thereof, not against me but against the ordinary."

<sup>1</sup> Hist. England, vol. ii. pp. 70—83.

<sup>2</sup> Apology: Eng. Works, p. 905.

"If, however," says Mr. Froude, "it be thought unjust to charge a good man's memory with an offence in which his part was only secondary, the following iniquity was wholly and exclusively his own." He then quotes, "without comment," the petition of the sufferer. In this case it has been well argued<sup>1</sup> that the petition itself<sup>2</sup> proves that the offence of Field was not heresy at all. It is to be noticed that the bishops were not concerned in it; that after Field had been set free for a time he was re-arrested by the Duke of Norfolk, who had no connexion whatever with ecclesiastical jurisdiction; that he was examined before the Star Chamber, and imprisoned in the Fleet; and that the books taken from him were not heretical writings, but "a Greek Vocabulary, S. Cyprian's Works, with a book of the same Sir Thomas More's making, The Supplication of Souls." Finally, not only is there no allusion in the petition to heresy; but Foxe, who would hardly have neglected so remarkable a case, makes no mention of it whatever, and More, in his Apology, where he defends himself specifically concerning his treatment of heretics, is equally silent.

As to the minor cases of cruelty we shall find them most clearly stated in More's own answer.

<sup>1</sup> North Brit. Rev. vol. xxx. p. 162 et seq.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, Hen. VIII., vol. v. 1059.

“Divers of them have said that of such as were in my house when I was chancellor I used to examine them with torments, causing them to be bound to a tree in my garden and there piteously beaten. . . . What cannot these brethren say that can be so shameless to say thus? . . . I never did cause any such thing to be done to any at all in all my life, except only twain. One was a child and a servant of mine in mine own house, whom his father, ere he came to me, had nursed up in such matters, and set him to attend upon George Joy. This Joy did teach the child his heresy against the Blessed Sacrament of the altar: which heresy this child in my house began to teach another child. And upon that point I charged a servant of mine to strip him like a child before mine household, for amendment of himself and ensample of such other. The other was one which after that he had fallen into these frantic heresies fell soon after into plain open frenzy.” More then declares that he had the man beaten, as the common method of recovering lunatics, the result being that the man came to himself. “And verily, God be thanked, I hear no harm of him now. And of all that ever came into my hand for heresy, else had never any of them any stripe or stroke given them, so much as a fillip on the forehead. And some have said that when Constantine (a heretic who had been put in the stocks at Chelsea) was gotten away, I was fallen for anger into a wonderful rage. But surely, though I would not have suffered him to go if it would have pleased him to have tarried still in the stocks . . .

never will I be so unreasonable as to be angry with any man that riseth if he can, when he findeth himself that he sitteth not at his ease." There can be no reason to doubt this statement. It was made at a time when More was known to have lost the King's favour and to be in imminent danger, and it was never contradicted, though many must have been aware of its truth or falsehood. It may be added that a humorous instance of his leniency is given by Strype—"Examining a Protestant, whose name was Silver, he told him, after his jesting way, that 'Silver must be tried in the fire.' 'Ay,' said Silver, 'but quick-silver will not abide it'—with which ready answer being delighted, he dismissed him."

The case of Bainham has been brought also as conclusive evidence of More's cruelty, but the evidence of Foxe is certainly not conclusive. It has been shown that the martyrologist, after making in one edition the cases of Tewkesbury and Bainham present an extraordinary parallel, in another transferred the statements concerning the former entirely to the latter. And Foxe, it must be remembered, was neither a contemporary writer nor a man of balanced or critical judgment.

That he searched for heretical books—that he chastised offenders in his own garden, that he imprisoned prisoners in his own house—an act of lenity rather than harshness—is admitted; but it may fairly be said that, although the scarcity of record makes it difficult to speak with certainty, as far as has appeared, on evidence at present known, the charges against More made by Foxe, and repeated, among others, by Burnet, Strype, and Mr. Froude, have not been substantiated. We are therefore justified in forming a conclusion in harmony with all that we know of More's character.

It only remains to notice More's religious writings subsequent to his acceptance of the seals. These are a confutation of Tyndale's answer to his Dialogue, a letter impugning the erroneous writing of John Frith against the Blessed Sacrament, the Apology, the Debellation of Salem and Bizance, an answer to the book of a "nameless heretic"<sup>1</sup> on the Lord's Supper, and several lesser books written in prison.

Tyndale's answer to More's Dialogue was published in the spring or early summer of 1531. In it he explained his view of the Church, defended his translation of the New Testament, and scornfully disposed of his antagonist's book. He did not adopt the comparatively moderate tone of More, but, moved apparently by personal animosity, wrote in a coarse and violent manner. He believed More to have been actuated by the basest motives in his opposition to the reformers. Speaking of the Council which had taken place in London in May 1530, at which his own works had been condemned, he declared that "More was the special orator of the bishops, to feign lies for their purpose."<sup>2</sup> Not only this, but he specifically charged the Chancellor with having accepted bribes from the bishops, and with writing against his convictions. Little as More was inclined to heed personal accusations, it was impossible for him, for the sake of the Church as well as of his own reputation, to leave this book unanswered. The charges against himself he barely referred to, but the whole system of Tyndale he once more denounced in the voluminous Confutation which he published in 1532, and revised and continued up to within a short time of his death. The first three books appeared in 1532, the second part, containing the next five, in 1533, and the ninth book was first published in the collected edition of his English works. The enormous length of this Confutation prevents any reasonable analysis, nor does its interest demand one. It is concerned chiefly with a recapitulation of the writer's previous arguments, especially on the character of the visible Church, and does not possess the vivacity and clearness of the Dialogue. To say that it is a keen and powerful work is only to say that it is More's; but it must be admitted that, in spite of the success with which the Chancellor treated particular points—such as the relation of the early Church to the gospel and the degrading views of his opponents concerning marriage—the victory on the whole remained with Tyndale. One passage, however, for its autobiographical interest, may find a place here.

<sup>1</sup> Tyndale (Demaus, Life of Tyndale, p. 281), or George Joy (Lumby, Notes to Roper, Utopia, Pitt Press ed. p. 180).

<sup>2</sup> Tyndale's Answer to More, p. 168, quoted by Demaus, p. 272.

“ He asketh me why I have not contended with Erasmus, whom he calleth my derling, of all this long while, for translating this word ecclesia into this word congregatio. And then he cometh forth with his fit proper taunt that I favour him of likelihood for making of his book Moria in my house. There had he hit me, save for lack of a little salt. I have not contended with Erasmus, my derling, because I find no such malicious intent with Erasmus, my derling, as I find with Tyndale. For had I found with Erasmus, my derling, the shrewd intent and purpose that I find with Tyndale, Erasmus, my derling, should be no more my derling. But I find in Erasmus, my derling, that he detesteth and abhorreth the errors and heresies that Tyndale plainly teacheth and abideth by; and therefore Erasmus, my derling, shall be my dear derling still. . . . As touching Moria in which Erasmus doth merely touch and reprove such faults and follies as he found in any kind of people, perusing every state and condition, spiritual and temporal, leaving almost none untouched, . . . in these days in which men by their own default misconster and take harm of the very scripture of God, if any man would now translate Moria into English, or some works either that I have myself written ere this,<sup>1</sup> albeit there be none harm therein, folk yet being (as they be) given to take harm of that is good, I would not only my derling's books but mine own also help to burn them both with mine own hands, rather than folk should (though through their own fault) take any harm of them, seeing that I see them likely in these days so to do."<sup>2</sup>

In the eighth book of his Confutation, which he

<sup>1</sup> Is this an allusion to the Utopia?

<sup>2</sup> English Works, pp. 421—423.

styled a Confutation of Frere Barne's Church, More gained a partial victory. He exposed the error in defining the Church as merely the invisible company of the elect, but his claim for it of absolute freedom from all error is not, perhaps, equally successful. It is interesting to notice that in the course of his argument More enunciates the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope.

He had now other antagonists besides Tyndale. He wrote a letter on the Blessed Sacrament, impugning the treatise which John Frith had written in prison.<sup>1</sup> It is pleasant to find him here writing in a tone of tender remonstrance rather than of indignant denunciation. From this short letter and from the larger work, "The Answer to the Poisoned Book which a Nameless Heretic hath named the Supper of the Lord,"<sup>2</sup> More's views on the doctrine of the Eucharist may be seen to have not departed from those of the medieval Church.

After his resignation of the Chancellorship More wrote also his Apology<sup>3</sup> and the Debellation of Salem and Bizance.<sup>4</sup> In addition to its personal interest the former of these books is to be noticed as an answer to a treatise called The Pacifier, written by a lawyer named Saintgerman. More's main thesis was that heresy, being a great crime against God, deserved a severe punishment from the secular power. The latter was an answer to Saintgerman's rejoinder, Salem and Bizance. Its

<sup>1</sup> English Works, pp. 833—844.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. pp. 1035—1138.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. pp. 845—929.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. pp. 929—1025.

plan is that which More had adopted in all his later works, a minute quotation and answer of his opponent, point by point, but there is nothing in the substance that had not been suggested in his earlier writings. The Answer on the Blessed Sacrament was the last of More's controversial works. During his imprisonment he wrote several devotional studies, but the spirit of strife and contention he laid for ever aside.

His services were not unappreciated by the clergy. The bishops were so delighted by his support of the Church that they offered him a large sum of money, to which the clergy liberally subscribed. When their deputation appeared to present it, More told them "that like as it were no small comfort to him that so wise and learned men so well accepted his simple doing, for which he intended never to receive reward but at the hands of God only, to whom alone was thanks thereof chiefly to be ascribed, so gave he most humble thanks unto them for all their bountiful consideration."

"When they [continues Roper, who tells the story], for all their importunate pressing upon him, could by no means make him take it, then they besought him to be content yet that they might bestow it upon his wife and children. 'Not so, my lords,' quoth he; 'I had liever see it all cast into the Thames than I or any of mine should have thereof the worth of one penny. For though your offer, my lords, be indeed very friendly and honourable, yet set I so much by my pleasure and so little by my profit that I would not, in good faith, for as much more have lost the rest of so many a night's sleep as was spent upon the same. And yet wish I would, for all that, upon conditions that all heresies were suppressed, that all my books were burned and my labour utterly suppressed.' Thus departing, they were fain to restore to every man his own again."<sup>1</sup>

The value of More's controversial works has, indeed, always been recognized by the Roman Church, and, as one of its writers confesses, they "have often been resorted to by later divines as arsenals stored with materials for the defence of the faith."<sup>2</sup>

Vehement as had been More's partisanship, he had not carried it into his private life. Miles Coverdale, while working at his translation of the Bible, was a guest at Chelsea.<sup>3</sup> Protestant servants were not excluded from the Chancellor's household.<sup>4</sup> Even Roper was at one time "weary of auricular confession, fasting, and vigils, and vehement in the new opinions," yet lost none of his father-in-law's affection. Sir Thomas argued with him in vain; then at length "in sober sadness said, 'I see, son, no disputation will do thee any good: henceforth therefore I will dispute with thee no more, only will I pray for thee that God will be so favourable as to touch thy heart.'" It was not long before this gentle silence succeeded.<sup>5</sup> Such facts as these must always be remembered when the violence of

<sup>1</sup> Roper, pp. 27, 28. Cf. More's English Works, p. 867.

<sup>2</sup> Walter, Life of More, p. 204.

<sup>3</sup> State Papers, i. 383. <sup>4</sup> English Works, p. 901.

<sup>5</sup> Cres. More, Life of More, pp. 120, 121.

More's controversial writings seems to invite a stern condemnation on the man. It is easy for one who is not moved to preserve a calm balance of language ; but to More the religious questions of the day were matters of life and death, and he could not restrain his fears for the result of the struggle.

" If any of the new learned,"<sup>1</sup> he wrote—and the passage contains the only excuse that can be made for his language—

" If any of the new learned use their words at their own pleasure, as evil and villainous as they list, against myself, I am content to forbear the requiting thereof and give them no worse words again than if they had spoken me fair. . . . But railing as they do against all holy things, I purpose not to bear that so patiently as to forbear to let them hear some parts of their language, though not with the grace that they use it. But to match them herein I neither can, though I would not if I could ; thinking it much worth rebuke therein to strive for mastery."

Again—

" If these gospellers will not cease to be heretics, let them at least be reasonable heretics and honest men : let them write, if not reason, at least after a reasonable manner, and leave railing. Then hardly let these evangelical brethren find fault with me if I use them not in words as fair as the matter may bear, but assure them, if they write as they do, I will handle them no otherwise than I have done."

<sup>1</sup> English Works, pp. 865, 866.

CHAPTER VI.

TROUBLES, IMPRISONMENT, AND DEATH.

“Virtue is like precious odours, most fragrant when they are incensed or crushed : for prosperity doth best discover vice, but adversity doth best discover virtue.”—BACON.

WHATEVER may be the differences of opinion on More’s religious life, there can be no feeling but admiration for his conduct in adversity. His resignation of the Seals was made, as has been said, without apparent loss of the King’s favour. For some time afterwards Henry gave no sign of his displeasure, but More was not recalled to Court. He remained in comparative seclusion at Chelsea, writing his theological works and avoiding as far as possible all conversation on politics. But the sinister figure of Cromwell had already risen into prominence. Roper mentions that when the new minister came one day to see him, More gave him some advice which showed how thoroughly he understood his master. “Master Cromwell,” quoth he, “you are now entered into the service of a most noble, wise, and liberal prince: if you will follow my poor advice, you shall in counsel giving unto his grace ever tell him what he ought to do, but never tell him what he is able to do, so shall you show yourself a true faithful servant and a right worthy counsellor. For if the Lion knew his own strength, hard were it for any man to rule him.”<sup>1</sup> More soon suffered from Cromwell’s neglect of this advice. The Lion at last knew his own strength, and rejoiced in the declaration of it. Sir Thomas foresaw the result: when the King’s marriage to Anne Bullen was announced, he said to Roper, “God give us grace, son, that these matters within a while be not confirmed with oaths.”<sup>2</sup>

While preparations were being made for the coronation of the new Queen, More received a letter from Tunstal and the Bishops of Winchester and Bath asking him to join in the pageant. The King had ordered also that they should send him £20 to buy a fitting robe. More merrily replied that as he accepted the latter request he might refuse the former. He would take no part in the joyful celebration of what was to him a sorrowful event. His refusal was the signal for the crowd of courtiers to fall upon him. As early as July 1533, he complained to Sir William Fitzwilliam that a gentleman had used him very ill, and requested the intervention of Cromwell.<sup>3</sup> He had congratulated himself that not one voice had been raised against the justice of his conduct as Chancellor; but no sooner was it known that he had lost the King’s favour than several accusations of corruption were brought against him.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 32.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 33.

<sup>3</sup> Ellis, Letters, 3rd Series, ii. 244.

A man named Parnell charged him with accepting a "great gilt cup" as a bribe. More, when examined before the Council, admitted having received it, whereon Queen Anne's father, now Earl of Wiltshire, broke out into unseemly rejoicing. More with calm humour continued the story, when it appeared that he had only accepted the cup to restore it immediately as a new year's gift. Two other accusations failed as signally.<sup>1</sup> His enemies then tried another plan. They charged him with writing a book published by his nephew William Rastell against the Articles on the Marriage and Divorce which had been officially issued at Christmas 1532. It was an accusation which he was able easily to rebut, for his last book, The Answer on the Sacrament, had been printed before the issue of the Articles, and had no reference whatever to them.<sup>2</sup>

He was soon, however, in much greater danger. The visions and prophecies of the Nun of Kent had become too evidently the instruments of others in attacking the King's proceedings to be suffered by the Government to continue. Cromwell had received intelligence of all that she said, and of the intrigues in which her supporters were engaged. Among the eminent men who had been led by curiosity or credulity to encourage her, More had taken some slight part. All that passed between them was at once made known to Cromwell,<sup>3</sup> and More's name began to occur ominously in the Minister's "remembrances."<sup>1</sup> When the imposture was exposed, and the offenders brought to trial, the utmost eagerness was shown to implicate the Bishop of Rochester, and More. In March 1534,<sup>2</sup> More wrote a long letter to Cromwell at his request conveyed through Roper, explaining his whole connexion with the Nun.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, pp. 34, 38.

<sup>2</sup> English Works, p. 1422.

<sup>3</sup> See the letter (Letters and Papers, Henry VIII., vol. vi. 1467) in which information is given exactly corresponding to More's subsequent explanation.

Eight or nine years before, he said, Warham had given to the King "a roll with certain words spoken in trances," and Henry had asked More his opinion of it. He had replied that "there was nothing in it that he could at all regard or esteem, for except that some was in rhyme, and that full rude, there was nothing that a right simple woman might not speak of her own wit"; but he added that as men talked of a miracle, he must not be bold to judge. Henry it seemed thought the matter, said More, "as light as it afterwards proved lewd."

From that time till Christmas 1532, More heard no more of the Nun. Then Father Resbye spoke of her one day as one in whom God wrought most wonderful works, and began to speak of her political revelations. More refused to speak of "the king's matter"—and so Resbye left him with a last eulogy of the Nun as having saved Wolsey's soul by her mediation. A few months later Father Rich questioned him, but he still avoided all talk of politics, for he thought some of her 'revelations' were very strange and some very childish. Finally the Fathers of Sion House told of things they disliked in her, and thereupon begged him to see her. He was in danger, he may already have felt, of being mixed up in some treasonous plottings, but he willingly saw her privately "in a little chapel there." His own account of his interview is worth quotation.

<sup>1</sup> See Letters and Papers, vi. 49, 108, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. vol. vii. 287.

"In the beginning thereof I showed that my coming to her was not of any curious mind to hear of such things as folk talked that it pleased God to reveal and show unto her, but for the great virtue that I had heard so many years every day more and more spoken and reported of her. I therefore had a great mind to see her and be acquainted with her, that she might have somewhat the more occasion to remember me to God in her devotion and prayers." To this she gave a very good and virtuous answer, that as God did far better by her than such a poor wretch was worthy, she feared that many people spoke more favourably of her than was the truth, and that she had already prayed for him. He spoke then of how she had told a certain Ellen of Tottenham, who professed also to have visions, that they were but illusions of the devil, whereon the maid had been less visited by them. So the Nun of Kent said to him that folk who are visited with such visions have great need to prove of what spirit they come, and that lately the devil in the form of a bird had been flickering about her chamber, and suffered himself to be caught and then suddenly changed into such a strange ugly-fashioned bird that they were all afraid and threw it out of the window. This was very midsummer madness indeed, but More seems to have been so impressed with the woman's sincerity that he was content merely to ask her prayers and warn her not to speak of politics, and that by a special letter. The Fathers of the Charterhouse and of Sion still tried to entangle him in talk about her, but he would not speak; and when at length she made her open confession of hypocrisy at Paul's Cross, he sent his servant "to tell the proctor of the Charterhouse that she was undoubtedly proved a false deceiving hypocrite." The "good man had so good an opinion of her that he could scarcely believe it."

The letter was indeed a full vindication; and no repudiation of any connexion with the nun could be more complete.<sup>1</sup> More told Cromwell that he had done a very meritorious deed in bringing forth to light such detestable hypocrisy.

More's candid explanation did not satisfy Cromwell or the King. Inquiries were made on all sides, and information of all kinds was greedily sought for, even as to More's "mumbling" in his son-in-law's parlour at Shacklewell about the King's immoral Court.<sup>2</sup>

When the bill of attainder against the Nun and her adherents was introduced into the House of <sup>1</sup> Fr. Bridgett prints the letter in extenso in his Life of More, pp. 323 sqq. I have been content to abridge it, with the help of Mr. Gairdner's abstract in the Letters and Papers of Henry VIII. Burnet, History of the Reformation, v. 431, accused Rastell of suppressing the letter in his edition of 1557, but the charge was satisfactorily disproved by Mr. Bruce (Archæologia, xxx. 149). For further references to the case in the State Papers, see vol. vi. 1468.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, vi. 290.

Lords it was found that the name of the late Chancellor was inserted,—a proceeding so entirely without even colour of justice that Roper may be supposed to be right in ascribing it solely to the King's anger.<sup>1</sup> More at once wrote to Cromwell,<sup>2</sup> expressing his surprise, and asking for a copy of the bill that he might point out its errors in a petition to the King; for he had, as we have seen, previously written a full account of his knowledge of the Nun.

In addition to this letter to the minister, More wrote also to the King,<sup>3</sup> reminding him of his promise on his resignation of the Chancellorship. He begged that he might lose all, even life, if Henry thought that he could be so monstrously ungrateful as for a moment to digress from his allegiance; but that if, on the other hand, his master perceived his faithfulness, his name might be put out of the bill. On the same day, March 5, he wrote again to Cromwell,<sup>4</sup> this time a full and clear defence of his whole conduct. He reiterated his assertions of the perfect harmlessness of his intercourse with the Nun. He then described his behaviour throughout the history of the Divorce question. He recalled the King's constant solicitations, and his own ready willingness to study that he might come to be reconciled to the Divorce, wherein he "would have been more glad than of any worldly commodities to have served his grace."

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 36.

<sup>2</sup> English Works, p. 1423.

<sup>3</sup> Letters and Papers, vii. 288.

<sup>4</sup> English Works, p. 1424.

The King had seemed to take his conduct in good part, and had used only those in the business “whose conscience his grace perceived well and truly persuaded.” “So I am he,” added More—and surely no more could have been desired—“that among other his grace’s faithful subjects, his highness being in possession of his marriage and this noble woman really anointed queen, neither murmur at it nor dispute upon it, nor never did nor will, but without any other manner meddling of the matter among his other faithful subjects, faithfully pray to God for his grace and hers both long to live and well, and their noble issue too, in such wise as may be to the pleasure of God, honour and surety to themselves, rest, peace, wealth and profit unto this noble realm.”<sup>1</sup> Thirdly, as to the primacy of the Pope, he gave the account of the King’s conversation with him ten years before, which has been mentioned above.<sup>2</sup> He declared his own opinion now to be that there was a primacy instituted of the “corps of Christendom” for a thousand years past. “I cannot perceive,” he added, “how any member thereof without the common assent of the body depart from the common head.” Thus it did not matter whether the primacy was instituted directly by God or by a general council. Since the King had appealed to a general council, he wished him all success, for he had never considered the Pope to be above a general council. His own writings that seemed to exalt the Papacy he had utterly suppressed—a proof that he never meant to “meddle in the matter against the king’s gracious pleasure whatsoever his own opinion might be.” Finally, he asked Cromwell to explain all this to the King—“that in the matter of that wicked woman<sup>1</sup> or in anything else, there was not on his part any other will than good.” The last words are most characteristic of the tender yet conscientious mind of the writer. “Nor yet in anything else never was there nor never shall there be any further fault found in me than that I cannot in everything think the same way that other men of more wisdom and deeper learning do; nor can find in mine own heart otherwise to say than as mine own conscience giveth me; which condition hath never grown in anything that ever might touch his gracious pleasure of any obstinate mind or misaffectionate appetite, but of a timorous conscience rising haply for lack of better perceiving and yet not without tender respect unto my most bounden duty towards his noble grace, whose only favour I so much esteem that I nothing have of mine own in all this world except only my soul, but that I will with better will forego than abide of his highness one heavy unpleasant look.”<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> This passage is omitted by Rastell—who dedicated his edition to Queen Mary—though found in the original letter, but see Archaeologia, xxx. p. 155. Rastell did not print from the originals.

<sup>2</sup> Pages 196, 197.

The day after these letters were written<sup>3</sup> the Lords addressed the King praying him to declare whether Sir Thomas More and others should not be heard in their defence “before the Lords in the royal senate called the Star Chamber.” The King had already found out that he would not be able to proceed severely against his late Chancellor, and had contented himself with taking away his salary or pension. He was not willing that More should have an opportunity of speaking before so large an audience as the Lords, and accordingly ordered the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Norfolk, and Cromwell to examine him privately. Roper entreated his father-in-law “earnestly to labour unto these lords for the help of his discharge out of the parliament bill,” and More promised to do so. The examination was conducted at first in a friendly manner, but the questions were not confined to his connexion with the Nun. Promises were soon succeeded by threats, and he was accused of inducing the King to maintain the Pope’s authority in his book against Luther. Nothing could be clearer than his denial of this, or more evidently truthful than his account of his interview with the King.

<sup>1</sup> The printed text simply reads “of the nonne.”

<sup>2</sup> English Works, p. 1428.

<sup>3</sup> Lords’ Journals, March 6.

Henry’s relations with the Papacy ten years before had been on a very different footing—“We are so much bounden,” the King had said, “to the See of Rome that we cannot do too much honour unto it.” When More reminded him of the Statute of Praemunire, Henry had replied, “Whatsoever impediment be to the contrary, we will set forth that authority to the uttermost: for we received from that see our crown imperial”—to which More with some shrewdness added, “till his grace with his own mouth told me it, I never heard of it before.” So the examination ended. More indeed hoped always that a change of Pope might set all things right again. "In the next general council it may well happen that this Pope may be deposed and another substituted in his place, with whom the king's highness may be very well content." He had never thought the Pope above the general council. But this was not all Henry wished.

"Then<sup>1</sup> took Sir Thomas More his boat towards Chelsea, wherein the way he was very merry, and for that I was nothing sorry, hoping that he had gotten himself discharged out of the parliament bill. When he was come home then walked we two alone into his garden together, where I, desirous to know how he had sped, said, 'Sir, I trust all is well, because you are so merry.' 'It is so indeed, son Roper, I thank God,' quoth he. 'Are you put out of the parliament bill, then?' said I. 'By my troth, son Roper,' quoth he, 'I never remembered it.' 'Never remembered it, sir?' quoth I; 'a case that touched yourself so near and us all, for your sake. I am sorry to hear it, for I verily trusted when I saw you so merry, that all had been well.' 'In good faith, I rejoice, son,' quoth he, 'that I had given the devil so foul a fall, and that with these lords I had gone so far as without great shame I could never go back again.' At which words waxed I very sad."

Thus More met whatever temptation to insincerity may but too naturally have beset him. There had been a struggle. "As<sup>2</sup> he lay by his wife's side many nights he slept not forethinking the worst that could happen unto him ; and by his prayers and tears he overcame the frailties of his flesh, which, as he confessed of himself, could not endure a fillip." The victory was won. More now tried to prepare his family for what he knew would happen before long. " He hired a pursuivant to come suddenly to his house, when he was one time at dinner, and knocking hastily at his door, to warn him to appear the next day before the Commissioners."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 38.

<sup>2</sup> Cres. More, p. 204.

Henry was very reluctant to spare More ; but the urgent entreaty of the Chancellor, who declared that the Lords would never pass the bill at all if his name were in it, induced him at last to yield ; and Cromwell meeting Roper at Westminster was able to tell him that his father-in-law was "put out of the bill." He at once sent a message to his wife, who told her father. " I faith, Meg," said More when he heard it, " quod differtur non aufertur." On March 28, John Granfyld, who held office in the Chancery, was able to write to the deputy of Calais, " My old master, Sir Thomas More, is clearly discharged of his trouble."<sup>2</sup> Yet More well knew that his fate could not be long avoided. When the Duke of Norfolk, trying to win him to approve of the King's acts, said, " Indignatio principis mors est": " Is that all, my lord ? " More answered. " Is there no more difference between your grace and me but that I shall die to-day and you to-morrow ? "

Before a month had passed a new trouble had arisen, and this the last. In the spring the Act of Succession had been passed. It was to be fortified by an oath which all persons might be called upon to take, or on refusal be considered guilty of misprision of treason. The oath itself was not fixed by the statute, but was submitted to the House of Lords, just as the prorogation was taking place. Its form, thus agreed upon without any close examination, was extremely strict. Allegiance was to be sworn to the King and to the heirs of his body, "of his most dear and entirely lawful wife Queen Anne begotten and to be begotten." Oaths made to another (that is to the succession of Mary) were to be vain and annihilate; and all men were to defend to the uttermost "the said Act of Succession and all other acts and statutes made in confirmation or for execution of the same, or for anything herein contained,"—and this "against all manner of persons of what state, dignity, degree, or condition soever they be,"<sup>1</sup> and repudiating oaths to "any foreign authority, prince or potentate." Cranmer, the secretary, Cromwell, the abbat of Westminster, and the Lord Chancellor Audley were appointed Commissioners to administer the oath. On April 13, they summoned More before them. He rose early, then confessed and received the Blessed Sacrament in Chelsea Church. His children used always, when he went to London, to come down with him to the boat, where he would kiss and bid them farewell; but on that morning he would not suffer them, but parted from them at the wicket-gate of his garden, and with a sad heart took boat with Roper. He sat silent for a while ; then said, “Son Roper, I thank our Lord the field is won.” And his biographer adds<sup>1</sup> one of those touches of nature which are so pathetic in their simple truth. “What he meant thereby, then, I wist not. Yet loth to seem ignorant I answered, ‘Sir, I am thereof very glad.’ But as I conjectured afterwards, it was for that the love he had to God wrought in him so effectually that it conquered in him all his casual affections utterly.” When he arrived at Lambeth he found many there before him, but he was at once admitted to the Commissioners. More, having read over the oath and the statute, at once declared that it was not in his purpose to point out any fault in the Act or in those that swore to it, or to condemn the conscience of any other man ; but that his conscience would not suffer him to take that oath, though he would swear to the succession. Then they all said that the King would have great indignation against him, for he was the first that had refused the oath ; and they showed him the roll of those who had sworn. As he still refused, they bade him leave them for a while. So he went into “the old burned chamber that looketh into the garden, and would not go down because of the heat.” As he sat there patiently waiting, and unmoved in mind, he saw the London clergy joyfully going to take the oath and passing out again with great mirth ; Latimer, as though he had “waxed wanton,” and the

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 205.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, Henry VIII., vol. vii. 384.

<sup>1</sup> The actual oath is recited in 26 Henry VIII. c. 2, the Act passed to confirm it, but the form in the Lords' Journals, vol. i. p. 82, is incomplete.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 40.

Vicar of Croydon calling loudly for wine, "either for gladness or dryness, or else that it might be seen quod ille notus erat pontifici." And he saw Dr. Wilson, one of the King's chaplains, who refused it, led off to the Tower. When the Commissioners had decided upon their further course, they called him back. Again they reminded him of the members who had sworn: again he replied that he blamed no man, but could not go against his conscience. They asked him to declare what part of the oath he objected to. He answered that he feared by doing so still further to exasperate the King. Yet when they reproached him with stubbornness he said that he would state his objections in writing, as well as promise to take the oath if any man would satisfy his conscience, if he received license to do so freely from the King. The Commissioners answered that a license from the King would be no defence against the laws—thus declaring a constitutional doctrine which was not regarded as fixed until a century and a half later. More said that he would trust to the King's honour: "so if he might not declare his objections without peril, to leave them undeclared was no obstinacy." Then Cranmer tried to find an escape for him, and said that, if he condemned not those who swore, he was not certain, evidently, that it was wrong to take the oath; on the other hand, his duty to the King was certain. More paused, struck by the subtlety of the suggestion; but after a moment he answered that in conscience the truth seemed not to be on the King's side. The abbat of Westminster reminded him of the whole Parliament that was against him. More replied by a reference to the general opinion of Christendom; an incautious saying which would be sure to incense the King when he heard it. On hearing this last refusal Cromwell swore that he had rather his only son had lost his head than that this should have happened, and declared that Henry would now think that the matter of the Nun was all More's contrivance. Sir Thomas answered that the truth was well known, and that whatever should befall him it lay not in his power to help it without the peril of his soul.<sup>1</sup> And so, the Chancellor repeating what More had said to Cromwell, who was to convey it to the King, the examination ended, and Sir Thomas was committed to the custody of the abbat of Westminster.

During the following days there was great discussion in the council as to what should be done with him. Fisher, who, according to the graphic phrase of the Bishop of Lichfield, was so worn with age that his body could not bear the clothes on his back, had given a similar answer. It may be inferred that it was to the preamble of the Act of Succession that they especially objected, for it contained a denunciation of the Pope; and the oath committed them to all the statements of the Act. Cranmer wrote to Cromwell asking that they might be sworn to the Act alone, without the preamble; but the King would not suffer it.<sup>2</sup> Nor was another suggested compromise—that they should swear not to divulge whether they had taken the oath or not—accepted. Having again refused the oath, on Friday, April 17, More was committed to the Tower. He had at first his own servant, John Wood, to attend on him, who was sworn to reveal anything that he might say against the King, the realm, or the council.

<sup>1</sup> The account of this examination is taken from More's letter to Margaret Roper, Eng. Works, pp. 1128, 1430.

<sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, Henry VIII., vii. 499, 500.

When he had been in prison a few days he wrote, with a coal, one of his most beautiful letters to his dearest daughter—

“ My own good daughter, our Lord be thanked I am in good health of body and in good quiet of mind: and of worldly things I no more despair than I have. I beseech Him make you all merry in the hope of Heaven. And such things as I somewhat longed to talk with you all our Lord put them into your minds, and better too, by His Holy Spirit, Who bless you and preserve you all. Written with a coal by your tender loving father, who in his prayers forgetteth none of you all, nor your babes, nor your nurses, nor your good husbands, nor your good husband’s shrewd wives, nor your father’s shrewd wife neither, nor our other friends. And thus fare ye heartily ever, for lack of paper.”<sup>1</sup>

Margaret Roper longed to see him, and knowing that all his letters were intercepted, wrote to him seeming to advise him to take the oath, hoping that Cromwell might then allow her to visit him. More replied sadly—“ I hear many terrible things towards me; but they all never touched me never so near, nor were they so grievous unto me, as to see you, my well-beloved child, in such vehement piteous manner labour to persuade unto me the thing wherein I have of pure necessity, for respect unto mine own soul, so often given you so precise answer before.”<sup>1</sup> Her answer to this showed that she had never meant to advise him against his conscience. “Father,” she wrote, “what think you hath been our comfort since your departing from us? Surely, the experience we have had of your life past, and godly conversation, and wholesome counsel, and virtuous example, and a surety not only of the continuance of that same, but also a great increase by the goodness of our Lord to the great rest and gladness of your heart.”<sup>2</sup> Before long, however, she was allowed to visit him: a little more than a month after his incarceration. First, before they talked of any worldly matter, they said the Seven Penitential Psalms and the Litany, and then they spoke freely. More said, “I believe, Meg, that they that have put me here ween they have done me a high displeasure. But I assure you on my faith, mine own dear daughter, if it had not been for my wife and you that be my children whom I account the chief part of my charge, I would not have failed long ere this to have closed myself in as strait a room, and straiter too”—thus showing that his longing for the monastic life had never left him.<sup>3</sup> After this his daughter was allowed to visit him constantly. He wrote a letter to be shown to all his friends asking them to regard all her requests as his own.<sup>4</sup> Once when she was with him he inquired how Queen Anne did.

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 1430.

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 1431.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 1432.

<sup>3</sup> Roper, pp. 41, 42.

<sup>4</sup> English Works, p. 1432.

"In good faith, father," said Margaret, "never better. There is nothing in the court but dancing and sporting." "Never better," said More, "alas, it pitieith me to remember unto what misery, poor soul, she will shortly come. These dances of hers will prove such dances that she will spurn our heads off like footballs. But it will not be long ere her head will dance the like dance."<sup>1</sup> He had no scruple in speaking of the illegality of his own imprisonment. "I may tell thee, Meg," said he one day, "they that have committed me hither for refusing of the oath not agreeable to the statute are not able by their own law to justify my imprisonment. And surely it is a great pity that a Christian prince should by a flexible council ready to follow his affections, and by a weak clergy lacking grace constantly to stand by their learning, with flattery so shameful be abused."<sup>2</sup> Indeed the oath was not strictly legal until the Second Act of Succession passed in the autumn session of 1534, which declared that the oath that had before been taken by so many should be reputed to be the very oath intended by the former Act.<sup>3</sup>

During the first few months of his imprisonment More had his own servant and his books, and besides his daughter, his wife was once allowed to visit him. Of their interview Roper gives a quaint account.<sup>4</sup> Dame Alice reproached him for his scruples, and asked how he could prefer a prison to his happy household at Chelsea. After he had a while quietly heard her, with a cheerful countenance he said unto

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 231.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 43.

<sup>3</sup> 25 Henry VIII. cap. xxii. sect. 9.

<sup>4</sup> Roper, p. 45.

her—“I pray thee tell me one thing: is not this house as nigh heaven as mine own ?” To whom she after her accustomed fashion, not liking such talk, answered, ‘Tillyvally, tillyvally.’ ‘How say you, Mistress Alice, is it not so ?’ quoth he. ‘Bone Deus, Bone Deus, man, will this gear never be left ?’ quoth she. ‘Well, then, if it be so, it is very well,’ said More. ‘Why should I joy in my gay house, when, if I should rise from my grave seven years hence, I should not fail to find some one there would bid me get out of the doors ? What cause have I then to like such an house as would so soon forget its master ?’”

In August, More’s step-daughter Alice happened to see the Lord Chancellor, and wrote to tell Margaret Roper of what had passed between them.<sup>1</sup> Sir Thomas Audley had expressed his surprise that More was so obstinate, and declared that he was glad that he himself had no learning save in a few of Aesop’s fables, of which he would tell her one. So he told a tale of a country where the rain that fell made all whom it wetted fools. The wise men kept underground till it was over, thinking then to come forth and rule. But the fools would have none of them, so the wise men wished they had been in the rain too. And he told her another fable “of a lion, an ass, and a wolf, and of their confession,” in which the ass appeared over-scrupulous, and thus got the most severe penance. Thus the Chancellor told fables to Mistress Alington, and she knew not how to answer him, but wrote to tell her “own good sister.”

<sup>1</sup> English Works, pp. 1434—1443. The letter seems to be the composition of Margaret, though Rastell says it is not known whether she or More wrote it.

Then Margaret Roper at her next going to the Tower, told her father of the letter, and wrote<sup>1</sup> of the interview to Alice Alington. She found him in health not much worse. “His diseases, both of his breast of old, and his reins now by reason of gravel and stone, and of the cramp also that divers nights grippeth him in his legs,” she found were not much increased; and after they had said the psalms and litany, he was ready to sit and talk and be merry. Then she told him of the good comfort of his wife and children disposing themselves every day more and more to set little by the world, and draw more and more to God, and that his household and his friends diligently remembered him in their prayers. Then she touched upon her sister’s letter, and told him that “if he changed not his mind, he was like to lose all his friends,” and so she hoped that he might find some way to satisfy his own conscience and please the King. More smiled upon her and said—“What, Mistress Eve (as I called you when you came first), hath my daughter Alington played the serpent with you, and with a letter set you awork to come tempt your father again, and for the favour that you bear him, labour to make him swear against his conscience, and so send him to the devil?” After that he looked sadly, and said, “Daughter Margaret, oftener than twice or thrice I have answered you that in this matter if it were possible for me to do the thing that might content the king's grace, and God therewith not offended, there hath no man taken this oath already more gladly than I would do. But since I cannot take it, I have no remedy. And albeit I know mine own frailty full well, yet if I had not trusted that God would give me strength rather to endure all things than offend Him by swearing ungodly against mine own conscience, you may be very sure I would not have come here." Still Margaret urged the same arguments, and showed him her sister's letter. When he had read it carefully, he thanked God for so good a daughter, and declared how often he prayed for her and all hers. He thought that both the Chancellor and Cromwell were his friends. "But in this matter, Meg, to tell the truth between thee and me," he said, "my lord's Æsop's fables do not greatly move me." He had often before, he continued, heard the first fable, of the rain that washed away all their wits, that stood abroad: it had been a tale so often told among the King's Council by the Lord Cardinal, when his grace was Chancellor, that he could not lightly forget it. . . . That fable had in his days helped the King and the realm to spend many a fair penny. He thought the fable obscure, and he could not well tell who were the fools and who wise. "I cannot well read such riddles, for, as Davus saith in Terence, 'Non sum Oedipus,' I may say, you wot well, 'Non sum Oedipus, sed Morus': which name of mine what it signifieth in Greek, I need not tell you." So he was glad to be counted a fool, but his life proved that he had never desired power.

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 1433.

Of the second fable, for which he did not envy Æsop the credit, though confession was not introduced into Greece until after Christ—it was too subtle for him. He supposed that the Chancellor and many others accounted him the over-scrupulous ass; yet he did not believe that all who said so thought so. However that might be, even if Fisher took the oath, with whom no man in the world could be compared for learning, wisdom, and virtue, yet he himself could not. “Verily, daughter,” he said, “I never intend to pin my soul to another man’s back, not even the best man I know at this day living, for I know not whither he may haply carry it.” So they argued together, till at last Margaret, seeing her father fixed in his determination, became very sad. He perceived it, and said, “How now, Mother Eve, where is your mind now? Sit not musing with some serpent in your breast, upon some new persuasion to offer father Adam the apple once again.” “In good faith, father,” said she, “I can no further go, but am, as I trow Cresede saith in Chaucer, come to Dulcamon, even at my wit’s end. For sith the example of so many wise men cannot in this matter move you, I see not what to say more, but if I should look to persuade you in the reason Master Harry Pattison made. For he met one day one of our men, and when he had asked where you were, and heard you were in the Tower, he waxed even angry with you, and said, ‘Why, what aileth him, that he will not swear? Wherefore should he stick to swear? I have sworn the oath myself.’ And so I can in good faith go no further neither, but if I should like Master Harry say, why should you refuse to swear, father, for I have sworn myself?"<sup>1</sup> More laughed and answered—"That word was like Eve, too; for she offered Adam no worse fruit than she had eaten herself." She could say nothing to move him, and so at last desisted. Then he sent messages to all his friends, and prayed his children to "be comfortable and serviceable to their good mother," and at last said—"If anything hap me that you would be loath, pray to God for me, but trouble not yourself; as I shall full heartily pray for us all, that we may meet together in heaven, where we shall make merry for ever, and never have trouble after."

This was the last attempt that any of his family made to change his resolution. As his imprisonment dragged on, though he remained firm in his own opinion, he was ever ready to excuse others. Two letters of his to Dr. Wilson, who had been imprisoned on the same day as himself, show how tender was his regard for the welfare of others.<sup>2</sup>

Meanwhile, though his imprisonment was lenient and he was attended by his own servant, the Government was proceeding against him in Parliament. He was attainted of misprision of treason, and the grants made to him in 1523 and 1525 were rescinded; even the small corrodies which the Abbey of Glastonbury had bestowed on him was taken away, and Abbot Whiting, eager to flatter the powers that were, conferred it on Cromwell with regret that it was of no greater value.<sup>1</sup> Save for a pension from the Order of S. John of Jerusalem,<sup>2</sup> he was utterly penniless—and the whole of his lands and goods and the inheritance of his children was taken away. Only the kind assistance of friends preserved his family from actual want.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> She had taken the oath with the addition "as far as will stand with the law of God"—a relaxation which would not be offered to her father.

<sup>2</sup> English Works, pp. 1431—1446.

In the State Papers is a pathetic document, the 'Petition of the wife and children of Sir Thomas More,' for the pardon and release of the said Sir Thomas, who has remained more than eight months in the Tower of London, "in great continual sickness of body and heaviness of heart."<sup>4</sup>

They besought that his wife might be allowed to retain his goods and the revenue of his lands so that some provision such as the King might think fit "in the way of mercy and pity to grant to him," might be made for the poor prisoner. Lady More also wrote to Cromwell as to a private friend, whose "manifold goodness" was her husband's and her own "greatest comfort." She had been compelled to sell her very clothes to provide the fifteen shillings a week charged for her husband and his servant in the Tower. She begged to be admitted to the King himself.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Father Gasquet, from whom better things might have been expected, in his very special pleading life of The Last Abbot of Glastonbury (pp. 70, 71), makes no reference to the wretched time-serving tone of the letter Whiting wrote to Cromwell on the matter. <sup>2</sup> Letters and Papers, vii. 1675.

<sup>3</sup> See the very beautiful letter of More to his "old and dear friend," Antonio Bonvisi. Works, 1455—1457.

<sup>4</sup> Letters and Papers, vii. 1591. Archæologia, xxvii. 361 sqq. <sup>5</sup> Letters and Papers, vii. 300.

No notice was taken of these requests, and More's position was daily becoming more dangerous. Parliament had now conferred on the King the title of 'Supreme Head of the Church of England,' and made it high treason to 'imagine' anything against his titles. 'Malicious' silence was accepted as evidence of evil imaginings. Thus More's life was at last brought by law within the King's power.

The Government, however, had not yet abandoned all hope of overcoming his scruples. One day Cromwell visited him, and with great friendliness assured him that the King would henceforth trouble his conscience no more. When he was gone, the prisoner, "to express what comfort he conceived of his words, wrote with a coal (for ink he had none) these verses following—

Fye, flattering fortune, look thou ne'er so fair,
Or ne'er so pleasantly begin to smile ;
As though thou wouldest my ruin all repair :
During my life thou shalt not me beguile.
Trust shall I God, to enter in a while
His haven of Heaven sure and uniform :
Ever after thy calm, look I for a storm.<sup>1</sup>"

He was far from idle in his solitude ; but turned with more zeal than ever to writing devotional treatises : a Dialogue of comfort against Tribulations ;<sup>2</sup> a Devotional preparation for the Holy Communion ;<sup>3</sup> a treatise on the Passion,<sup>4</sup> which he was not able to complete, for all his books and writing materials were taken away, and several prayers and medita-

<sup>1</sup> English Works, p. 1432. Roper's version (p. 44) is slightly different.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. pp. 1264—1269.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. pp. 1139—1264.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. pp. 1270—1404.

tions.<sup>1</sup> Of these writings it may be said that, tedious as the style may appear to modern readers, there are no more deeply devotional works in the English language. He managed also to correspond with Fisher, but this was no sooner discovered than he was subjected to much more rigorous treatment. After this he was not allowed to attend any religious services, and his wife and children were no longer admitted to see him. He gave himself to meditation, and kept his windows fast shut. Still he kept his quaint humour. When the Lieutenant of the Tower asked his reason for this, he answered, "When all the wares are gone, the shop-windows are put up."<sup>2</sup>

He was now able to write but very rarely, and with great caution,<sup>3</sup> and had begun to see clearly that his life would probably be taken. In the only two letters which he was able to write during the rest of the year, there are signs that he foresaw the end approaching. In this spirit he wrote,<sup>4</sup> "Thus, mine own good daughter, putting you finally in remembrance that albeit if the necessity so should require I thank our Lord in this comfort in mine heart at this day, and I trust in God's goodness so shall have grace to continue, yet I verily trust that God shall so inspire and govern the king's heart that he shall not suffer his noble heart and courage to requite my true faithful service with such extreme uncharitable and unlawful dealings, only for the displeasure that I cannot think so as others do. But his true subject will I die, and truly pray for him will I, both here and in the other world. And then, my good daughter, have me commended to my good bedfellow and all my children, men, women and all, with all your babes and your nurses, and all the maids and all the servants, and all our kin and all our other friends abroad. And I beseech our Lord to save them all, and keep them, and I pray you all to pray for me, and I will pray for you all. And take no thought for me, whatsoever you shall hap to hear, but be merry in God."

<sup>1</sup> Ibid. pp. 1404—1418. <sup>2</sup> Stapleton, cap. xiii. p. 286.

<sup>3</sup> "Yet still by stealth he could get a little piece of paper in which he would write down letters with a coal : of which my father left me one, which was to his wife, which I account as a peculiar jewel." Cres. More, p. 240.

<sup>4</sup> English Works, pp. 1446—1451.

The new year found More still firm in his opinion. After a long silence, he found means again to write to his daughter, on May the 2nd or 3rd, 1534, to tell her of his last examination. The Charterhouse monks had been condemned, and on every side there were signs that the King's indignation was at its height. On April 30, More was called before Cromwell and others of less note. Cromwell asked if he had heard of the statutes lately passed in Parliament. More replied that he had, but had not thought it needful to peruse them carefully. Cromwell then reminded him of the Act giving the title of Supreme Head of the Church, under Christ, to the King, and asked his opinion on it. "Whereunto," says More in his letter to his daughter, "I answered 'that I had well trusted that the king's highness would never have commanded any such question to be demanded of me, considering that I ever from the beginning well and truly from time to time, declared my mind unto his highness, and since that time<sup>1</sup> I said ‘unto your mastership, master Secretary, also, both by mouth and by writing.’ And now I have in good faith discharged my mind of all such matters, and neither will dispute king’s titles or pope’s. But the king’s true subject I am and will be, and daily I pray for him and all his, and for you all that are of his honourable council, and for all the rea.m. And otherwise than this I never intend to meddle.” To this Cromwell replied that he feared that would not satisfy the King. Several more questions were put him. More simply said, “I am the king’s faithful subject and daily bedesman. I say no harm, I think no harm, but I wish everybody good. And if this be not enough to keep a man alive, in good faith I long not to live.”<sup>1</sup> It seems that now his relations were less strictly excluded ; for on May 4,<sup>2</sup> when the monks of the Charterhouse were led to execution, Margaret Roper was with her father as he looked out on them from his window.<sup>3</sup> “Look, dost thou see, Meg ?” said More sadly, “that these blessed fathers be now as cheerful going to their deaths as bridegrooms to their marriages. For God, considering their long-continued life in most sore and grievous penance will no longer suffer them to remain here in this vale of misery and iniquity, but speedily hence take them to the fruition of His Everlasting Deity. Whereas thy silly father, Meg, that like a most wicked caitiff hath passed forth the whole course of his miserable life most pitifully, God, thinking him not worthy so soon to come to that eternal felicity, leaveth him here yet, still in the world further to be plunged and turmoiled with misery.” But it was not for much longer. Three days afterwards Cromwell came to him, with the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, and the Earl of Wiltshire. Cromwell declared that the King was not satisfied with his previous answers, and commanded him on his allegiance either to confess it to be lawful that he should be the Supreme Head of the Church of England, “or else utter plainly his malignity.” More answered that he had no malignity and therefore could utter none; that he could say no more than he had said; and, remembering the King’s charge to him when he entered his service, he would take comfort from knowing that the time would come when God would declare his truth before the King and the whole world. Then the Chancellor and Cromwell said the King could force him to answer; to which he replied that it would be hard to make him choose between the loss of his soul and the destruction of his body—a saying on which much stress was laid at his trial. Then Cromwell reminded him of his duty as Chancellor to examine heretics, and said that “men were as well beheaded now for denying the King’s supremacy as they were then burned for denying the Pope's." To this More replied that there was a difference between a national law and a law of all Christendom. Then they asked him to swear to answer their questions concerning the King. He refused, saying that he had not so little foresight as not to conjecture what the questions might be. Then they told him that the questions were whether he had seen the statute and whether he believed it to be lawful. He declared that he had before admitted the first, but would not answer the second question. The full brutality of his persecutors appeared in their last taunt. They said, "Why, then, did he not speak out against the statute if he cared not for life? it appeared well that he was not content to die." More answered with noble simplicity: "I have not been a man of such holy living that I might be bold to offer myself to death, lest God for my presumption might suffer me to fall." So the examination ended, Cromwell declaring that he thought worse of More and believed him not to mean well.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See his letter to a priest named Lever. English Works, p. 1450.

<sup>1</sup> English Works, pp. 1451, 1452.

<sup>2</sup> Roper, p. 54.

<sup>3</sup> The second band of the monks were executed on June 19. This is referred to by Mr. S. L. Lee, Dict. National Biography.

He was again examined more than once,<sup>2</sup> the object being to obtain sufficient evidence from his own lips, to make a case against him. He was examined twice by the Commissioners, and afterwards the Solicitor-General, Rich, Sir Richard Southwell, and Mr. Palmer were sent to take away his books. While the two last were packing them up Rich began to talk to More, asking, "If there were an Act of Parliament that all the realm should take me for the King, would not you, Master More, take me for the King?" "Yes, sir," replied More, "that would I." "I put the case farther," said Rich, "that there were an Act of Parliament that all the realm should take me for Pope, would not you take me for the Pope?" "For answer," said Sir Thomas, "to your first case, the Parliament may well meddle with the state of temporal princes: but to make answer to your second case, I will put you this case. Suppose the Parliament should make a law that God should not be God, would you then, Master Rich, say God were not God?" "No, sir," said Rich, "I would not, sith no Parliament may make any such law." When More was brought to trial Rich swore that he had replied to this, "No more could the Parliament make the King Supreme Head of the Church."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> English Works, pp. 1452—1454.

<sup>2</sup> E. g. June 3. Letters and Papers, viii. 814, where his answers are given.

On June 14, minute interrogations were put to him as to his correspondence with Fisher.<sup>2</sup> He admitted writing "divers scrolls" to the Bishop. In them, beside "comforting words," he had merely stated on his first imprisonment that he had refused the oath, and that in his last examination he had declared that he would meddle with nothing henceforth, but give his mind to God. Fisher had questioned him on the meaning of the word "maliciously" in the recent statute,—whether a man speaking nothing of malice did offend against it; to which he had answered that he took that to be its meaning, but that "the interpretation of the statute would not be taken after their mind; and therefore it was not good for any man to trust to any such thing." Further, he had advised the Bishop "to make his answer according to his own mind and to meddle with no such thing as he had written unto him, lest he should give the Council occasion to ween that there was some confederacy between them both." Finally he had warned him that Rich had told him that it was all one not to answer and to say against the statute what a man would, and had begged his prayers. Further he had written to his daughter of his last examinations, fearing lest she should suffer from hearing of them suddenly. Then for the last time the following questions were put to him—"whether he would obey the King's highness as Supreme Head on earth immediately under Christ, of the Church of England, and him so repute, take, accept, and recognize, according unto the statute in that behalf made?" To this he said that he could make no answer. Secondly—"whether he would consent and approve the King's highness' marriage with the most noble Queen Anne that now is to be good and lawful; and affirm that the marriage between the King's said highness and the Lady Katherine, Princess Dowager, was and is unjust and unlawful." He answered "that he never did speak or meddle against the same; nor thereunto could make answer." Thirdly, it was declared that he being one of the King's subjects was bound to answer both the questions, and recognize the King as Supreme Head of the Church as all are bound to do by statute.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 46; cf. Lord Herbert's Henry VIII, pp. 421, 422.

<sup>2</sup> His servants were also examined; and interesting details may be found in Letters and Papers, vol. viii. 856.

He replied that he could make no answer.<sup>1</sup> His answers were taken down at length and are preserved in the State Papers. It was found impossible to extract from him evidence incriminating either Fisher or himself. He steadfastly denied all collusion and any discussion with others upon political matters.

But it was not evidence of Fisher's guilt that the Government desired to draw from More. The Bishop was executed on June 22.<sup>2</sup> Four days later a Special Commission of Oyer and Terminer for Middlesex was issued to the Lord Chancellor Audley, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, other lords, including Anne Boleyn's father and brother—his bitter enemies—Cromwell, and nine judges. The grand jury of Westminster returned a true bill; and the petty jury was summoned to meet on July 1.<sup>3</sup>

On that day More was brought to the bar by Sir Edward Walsingham, Lieutenant of the Tower. He was very weak from his long imprisonment, and as he leant upon his staff, his hair now gray and his beard long, his face still cheerful and content, many must have thought of the strong man who five years before, as Lord High Chancellor of England, in that same Court of King's Bench, had knelt down every morning to ask his father's blessing.

<sup>1</sup> State Papers, Henry VIII. vol. i. p. 432.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. S. L. Lee, Dictionary of National Biography, says he was executed "six days later" than the Carthusians, who died on June 19.

<sup>3</sup> Details of the trial are to be found in Letters and Papers, vol. viii. 974, 996, 997, in Spanish Papers, v. 180, Archaeologia, xxvii. 361 sqq. etc.

The indictment was long. It charged him first with traitorously attempting to deprive the King of his title of Supreme Head of the Church of England, inasmuch as he had refused to answer on May 7 to the questions of the Councillors whether he would accept the King as Supreme Head pursuant to the statute, saying, "I will not meddle with any such matters, for I am fully determined to serve God and to think upon His Passion and my passage out of this world"; further that he agreed with Fisher in his treason, and wrote to him the words which he afterwards used to the Council—"The Act of Parliament is like a sword with two edges, for if a man answer one way it will confound his soul, and if he answer the other way it will confound his body"; further that he, on June 3, falsely, maliciously, and traitorously persevered in "refusing to give a direct answer, but imagining to deprive the king of the dignity, title, or name of his royal estate and to sow and generate sedition and malignity in the hearts of his true subjects, spoke openly" the same words as Fisher had used; that he and Fisher had burnt all the letters that passed between them, in order to conceal their most false and wicked treason; and lastly, that in conversation with the Solicitor-General Rich he had denied the right of Parliament to confer on the King the title of Supreme Head—"as to the primacy, a subject cannot be bound because he cannot give his consent to that in Parliament; and although the king is so accepted in England, yet many foreign countries do not affirm the same." When the indictment was read, the Lord Chancellor Audley, and the Duke of Norfolk, turned to him and said, "You see, Master More, that you have grievously offended his royal Majesty; yet if you will repent and change that opinion in which you have hitherto most obstinately persevered, we trust so much in his majesty's clemency and kind heart, that pardon and mercy will, we have no doubt, be obtained for you."

More answered—"My lords, I thank you very much for your good will, but yet I pray God Almighty to keep me firm in this opinion of mine that I may continue in it till the hour of my death. Respecting the charges brought against me, I doubt whether my understanding, my memory or my tongue will be sufficient to compass them all, grave and manifest as they are, especially considering my present imprisonment and great infirmity."

Thereupon a chair was brought him: when he was seated, he resumed. He pleaded "not guilty," declaring that if the terms "maliciously, traitorously and diabolically" were withdrawn, he saw no treason with which he could be charged. Concerning the King's second marriage, he asserted that it was his duty as a good subject to answer when the King asked him according to his conscience; and that when he had done so years before, it could have been no offence, or, if it had been, an imprisonment of fifteen months with forfeiture was sufficient punishment. With regard to the examinations, he saw no harm in his answers. "I wish no harm to any," he said, repeating words he had formerly used, " and if this will not keep me alive, then I desire not to live. By all which I know that I could not transgress any statute, or incur any crime of treason. For neither this statute nor any law in the world can punish any man for holding his peace. For they only can punish words or deeds, God only being Judge of our secret thoughts."

Fearing lest these words, if repeated, might influence even the packed jury,<sup>1</sup> the Attorney-General hastily interrupted him, declaring that malicious silence to such a question, which all dutiful subjects would answer, was proof of treason. "Nay," said More, "my silence is no sign of any malicious mind, which the king himself may know by many of my dealings: neither doth it convince any man of breach of your laws, for it is a maxim among the Civilians and Canonists, 'Qui tacet, consentire videtur.' You say that all good subjects are bound to reply; but I say that the faithful subject is more bound to his conscience and his soul than to anything else in the world, provided his conscience, like mine, does not raise scandal or sedition, and I assure you that I have never discovered what is in my conscience to any person living. As to the second article, that I have conspired against the statute by writing eight letters to the Bishop of Rochester, advising him to disobey it, I could wish these letters had been read in public, but as you say the Bishop has burnt them, I will tell you the substance of them. Some were about private matters connected with our old friendship. Another was a reply to one of his asking how I had answered in the Tower to the first examination about the statute. I said that I had informed my conscience, and so he ought also to do the same. I swear that this was the tenor of the letters, for which I cannot be condemned by your statute."

<sup>1</sup> One at least of the jury, Parnell, was a personal enemy of More.

He thus repeated the assertion of the innocence of his correspondence with Fisher, which he had made at his last examination. With regard to the saying that the law was a two-edged sword, he urged that his answer was but conditional. "If there be danger in both either to allow or to disallow this statute, and, therefore, like a two-edged sword, it seemeth a hard thing that it should be offered to me, that never have hitherto contradicted it either in word or deed." Those had been his words: what the Bishop answered, he knew not; "if his answer was like mine, he said, it proceeded not from any conspiracy of ours, but from the likeness of our wits and learning. To conclude: I unfeignedly avouch that I never spake such against this law to any living man: although, perhaps, the king's majesty hath been told the contrary." Then the jury of twelve men was summoned, and the charges proceeded with.

The Solicitor-General, Rich, was then called to give evidence of his interview with Sir Thomas in the Tower: which he did in the manner that has been already noticed.<sup>1</sup> Then said More: "If I were a man, my Lords, that did not regard an oath, I need not, as it is well known, in this place at this time or in this case, stand as an accused person. And if this oath of yours, Mr. Rich, be true, then I pray that I may never see God in the face: which I would not say were it otherwise, to gain the whole world." He then reluctantly spoke of the badness of Rich's character, and asked if it were likely that he would trust to such a man an opinion on the Supremacy, which he had carefully concealed from the King and all his Council. Again, even if he had thus spoken, which he denied, any statement in 'familiar secret talk' could not be construed into 'malicious' speaking. Sir Richard Southwell and Mr. Palmer, who were called in support of Rich, admitted that they had heard nothing of the conversation. In spite of this, the jury, staying out of Court "scarce one quarter of an hour, for they knew," says Cresacre More, "what the King would have done in that case," returned a verdict of guilty. It must be admitted indeed that as the law stood the trial itself was not unjust. If the evidence were to be believed and the law to be obeyed, the jury had no choice but to find More guilty.

<sup>1</sup> Above, pp. 260, 261.

The Chancellor was about to pass sentence immediately, when More demanded the usual license to show cause why judgment should not be passed upon him. He spoke simply and directly in solemn protest against the injustice of the law by which he was condemned. He declared that Parliament could not give the King a spiritual pre-eminence, or supreme government of the Church; or make a law for the Church against the consent of Christendom, and contrary to Magna Charta. The Chancellor demanded how he could stand against the bishops, and the Universities of the land. More replied—"If the number of bishops and universities be so material as your lordship seemeth to take it, I see little cause why that thing in my conscience should make any change. For I doubt not, but of the learned and virtuous men that be yet alive, not only of this realm, but of all Christendom, there are ten to one that are of my mind in this matter: but if I should speak of those learned and virtuous doctors that be already dead, of whom many are now saints in heaven, I am very sure that they are far more who, while they lived, thought in this case as I think now. And therefore am I not bound, my Lords, to conform my conscience to the counsel of one realm, against the general counsel of Christendom: for one bishop of your opinion I have a hundred saints of mine; and for one parliament of yours, and God knows of what kind, I have all the General Councils for one thousand years; and for one kingdom I have France and all the kingdoms of Christendom." Norfolk told him that now his malice was clear. He forgot how readily such weapons as Henry now used might be turned against himself. More replied—"What I say is necessary for the discharge of my conscience and satisfaction of my soul, and to do this I call God to witness, the sole Searcher of human hearts. I say further, that your statute is ill made, because you have sworn never to do anything against the Church, which through all Christendom is one and undivided, and you have no authority, without the common consent of all Christians, to make a law or Act of Parliament or Council against the union of Christendom." The Chancellor then asked the opinion of the Lord Chief Justice on the sufficiency of the indictment. The reply was cautious: "My Lords all, by S. Julian, I must needs confess that, if the Act of Parliament be not unlawful, then is not the indictment in my conscience insufficient." The Chancellor then passed sentence "according to the form of the new law." More, now throwing away all disguise, declared that he had studied the matter for seven years, and "could find no colour for holding that a layman could be head of the Church." Once more the judges asked if he had anything to say.

He replied—"More have I not to say, my Lords; but like as the blessed Apostle S. Paul, as we read in the Acts of the Apostles, was present and consenting to the death of S. Stephen, and held their clothes, that stoned him to death; and yet be they now both holy saints in heaven, and shall continue there friends for ever, so I verily trust and therefore right heartily pray, that, though your Lordships have now in earth been judges to my condemnation, we may yet, hereafter in heaven, merrily all meet together to our everlasting salvation."

The trial ended, More was led back by his old friend, Sir William Kingston, the Constable of the Tower, who could not restrain his tears. On the way, his son threw himself at his feet, and implored his blessing; yet even at this parting More remained calm. When the sad procession reached the Old Swan by London Bridge, there was a short pause.

There More was in a familiar place, very near to S. Anthony's School. The scene must have recalled strange thoughts and memories at such a moment.

"Life all past
Is like the sky, when the sun sets in it,
Clearest when farthest off."

There he parted with Sir William Kingston, whom he comforted with the thought of a happy meeting in heaven. "In faith," said Kingston, when he spoke of it afterwards to Roper, "I was ashamed of myself, that at my departure from your father, I found my heart so feeble, and his so strong, that he was fain to comfort me, which should rather have comforted him."<sup>1</sup>

There was still the last and saddest parting of all.<sup>2</sup> As he came to Tower-wharf, his dearest daughter, Margaret, pushed her way through the sympathetic crowd and past the guard which surrounded him, and flung herself into his arms, "not able to say any word but 'Oh, my father ! Oh, my father !'"<sup>3</sup> He was still calm enough to give her his blessing, "and many goodly words of comfort." "Take patience, Margaret," he said, "and do not grieve ; God has willed it so. For many years didst thou know the secret of my heart." They had already parted once, when she ran back and threw her arms around him. "Wherewithal he spoke not a word, but carrying still his gravity, tears fell from his eyes : yea, there were very few in all the group who could refrain thereat from weeping, no, not the guard themselves." So, too, Margaret Clement<sup>1</sup> embraced him, and Dorothy Colley, one of Margaret Roper's maids, and so they parted.

<sup>1</sup> Roper, p. 52.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 53.

<sup>3</sup> Cres. More, p. 264.

The few days of life that were still left him, More spent in severe mortification, and wore his shroud constantly. He had no intimation of when his sentence was to be carried out; but on the 5th he seemed to feel that death was at hand. He sent to his daughter Margaret his hair shirt, which he had worn secretly for many years, with the last of his tender letters, so beautiful in its pathetic simplicity. "Our Lord bless you, good daughter, and your good husband, and your little boy, and all yours, and all my children, and all my god-children, and all our friends. Recommend me, when you may, to my good daughter Cicely, whom I beseech our Lord to comfort: and I send her my blessing, and to all my children, and pray her to pray for me. I send her an handkercher. And God comfort my good son her husband. My good daughter Daunce hath the picture in parchment that you delivered me from my lady Conyers. Her name is on the back side. Shew her that I heartily pray her that you may send it in my name to her again, for a token from me to pray for me. I like special well Dorothy Colley. I pray you be good unto her. I would not whether this be she you wrote me of. If not yet I pray you be good to the other, as you may, in her affliction, and to my good daughter<sup>2</sup> Joan Aleyn too. Give her, I pray you, some kind answer, for she sued hither to me this day to pray you be good to her. I cumber you, good Margaret, much: but I would be sorry if it should be any longer than to-morrow. For it is Saint Thomas even, and the utas of Saint Peter: therefore to-morrow long I to go to God: it were a day very meet and convenient for me. I never liked your manner toward me better than when you kissed me last: for I love when daughterly love and dear charity hath no leisure to look to worldly courtesy. Farewell, my dear child, and pray for me and I shall for you and all your friends that we may merrily meet in Heaven. I thank you for your great cost. I send now to my good daughter Clement her algorism stone, and I send her and my godson and all others, God's blessing and mine. I pray you at good time convenient recommend me to my good son, John More; I liked well his natural fashion.<sup>1</sup> Our Lord bless him and his good wife, my loving daughter: to whom I pray him be good as he hath good cause: and that if the land of mine come into his hand he break not my will concerning his sister Daunce. And our Lord bless Thomas, and Austin,<sup>2</sup> and all that they shall have."<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Margaret Giggs, his adopted daughter, now married to Dr. Clement.

<sup>2</sup> Note by Rastell to edit. 1557. "This was not one of his

Even in his last hours he was exposed to interruption and vexation: yet he still maintained his playful humour. He had thought of shaving off his daughters, nor no kin to him, but one of Mistress Roper's maids."

---

<sup>1</sup> At his last meeting when he came from judgment: John More was now in prison.

<sup>2</sup> John More's children.

<sup>3</sup> Eng. Works, pp. 1457, 1458.

beard, and coming forth to his execution that all might see him as he had been, his clear pale features as we know them in Holbein's drawing. A courtier came troubling him with exhortations to change his mind. "Well," said More at last, "I have changed it." This was at once reported to the King, by whom a message was sent to the prisoner to know what was the change. "Then Sir Thomas rebuked the courtier for his lightness that he would tell the king every word that he spoke in jest: for he had meant merely that he would not be shaven."<sup>1</sup>

When it was communicated to him that, by the King's merciful pardon, the horrible sentence of the law would be commuted into beheading, he exclaimed, "God forbid that the king should use any more such mercy unto any of my friends; and God bless all my posterity from such pardons."<sup>2</sup>

Very early in the morning of July 6, Sir Thomas Pope, "his singular dear friend," came from the King and Council, to say that his execution would take place that day before nine o'clock. "Master Pope," said More, "for your good tidings I most heartily thank you. I have always been bounden much to the king's highness for the benefits and honours which he hath from time to time heaped on me. Yet more bounden am I to his grace for putting me into this place where I have had convenient time and space to have remembrance of my end; and most of all that it pleased him so shortly to rid me of the miseries of this wretched world. And therefore will I not fail to pray for his grace, both here and in another world." Pope then told him that the King wished him not to use many words at his execution. "You do well to give me warning of his grace's pleasure," he replied, "for otherwise I had purposed somewhat to have spoken, but of no matter wherewith his grace or any other should have cause to be offended. Nevertheless I am ready to obey his command." Then they spoke of his burial, at which the King gave leave for his wife and children to be present. So they bade farewell, and, as Pope could not refrain from tears, More comforted him—"Quiet yourself, good Master Pope, and be not discomfited; for I trust that we shall once in Heaven see each other full merrily, where we shall be sure to live and love together in eternal bliss."

<sup>1</sup> Stapleton, cap. xvi. p. 322.

<sup>2</sup> Cres. More, p. 268.

When his friend had left him, More dressed himself in his best apparel, 'and put on his silk camlet gown which his entire friend Mr. Antonio Bonvisi gave him.' The Lieutenant of the Tower begged him to change it, 'for the executioner, who should have it, was but a javill.' "What," said More, "shall I account him a javill that will do me this day so singular a benefit? Nay, I assure you, were it cloth of gold, I would think it well bestowed on him, as S. Cyprian did, who gave his executioner thirty pieces of gold." He was persuaded, however, to change it for a 'gown of friese,' but he sent an angel to the executioner.

"He<sup>1</sup> was therefore brought by Master Lieutenant out of the Tower, his beard being long, which fashion he had never before used, carrying in his hands a red cross, casting his eyes often towards heaven." A woman on the way offered him wine, which he refused. Another called after him that he had done her wrong when he was Chancellor, to whom he gave answer, "that he remembered her cause very well, and that if he were now to give sentence thereof, he would not alter what he had already done."<sup>1</sup> A man whom his counsel had often restrained from religious despair, cried to him with great earnestness that he was again in terrible temptation. "Go and pray for me," said More, "and I will pray for you."

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Froude professes to quote throughout his account of More's last days from Cres. More: he does so however very loosely, and Roper is in many places much more simple and beautiful. The following short passage is Cres. More's own words, not Mr. Froude's version.

When he came to the scaffold, he was too weak to mount it, and nearly fell. "I pray you, Master Lieutenant," he exclaimed, "see me safe up, and for my coming down let me shift for myself." Then he asked the prayers of all the people, and said to them simply that he died in and for the faith of the Holy Catholic Church. Then kneeling down he said the Miserere. When the executioner asked his forgiveness he kissed him. "Thou wilt do me this day a greater benefit than ever any mortal man can be able to do me. Pluck up thy spirit, man, and be not afraid to do thine office. My neck is very short: take heed therefore that thou strike not awry, for saving of thine honesty." When they would have covered his eyes, he said, "I will cover them myself," and wrapped them with a cloth he had brought with him. As he laid his head on the block, he put aside his beard, saying, ‘that that had never committed any treason.’<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 273.

“Thus,” as Addison beautifully says, “the innocent mirth which had been so conspicuous in his life did not forsake him to the last. His death was of a piece with his life: there was nothing in it new, forced, or affected. He did not look upon the severing of his head from his body as a circumstance which ought to produce any change in the disposition of his mind: and as he died in a fixed and settled hope of immortality, he thought any unusual degree of sorrow and concern improper.”<sup>2</sup>

Of all the brave deaths upon English scaffolds<sup>3</sup> which that sad century and the next produced, there was none more calm and bright than his. Of one who a hundred and ten years later died also for his conscience, it was said that “never did man put off mortality with better courage.” Of More at least it may be declared that no man was ever more willing to die. And not only death was welcome, but happy was the path of affliction that led to it. More had learnt to tread in the road of the Passion of his Master, and it seemed to him to be strewn with flowers. With Mason he might cry—

“I sing to think this is the way Unto my Saviour’s Face.”

Whatever may be thought by theologians or

<sup>1</sup> Cres. More, p. 275.

<sup>2</sup> Spectator, No. 349.

<sup>3</sup> I do not understand the statement, Dict. Nat. Biog. xxxviii. 439, that “his composure on the scaffold is probably without parallel.” Strafford, Laud, Charles I. do not seem to have shown anything but composure.

historians of the speculative opinion for which More shed his blood, there can be no doubt that he died a martyr.

A candid examination of the Act of Supremacy, in the light of legal interpretation and constitutional precedent, must show that it was not necessarily contradictory to the opinions which Roman theologians held dear. It was accepted by many who are still revered on the Continent as pillars of the orthodox faith.<sup>1</sup> But no man can deny that More was a witness to the absolute supremacy of conscience. He was also, in the words of Pope Paul III, excellent in sacred learning and bold in the defence of truth. He laid down his life rather than surrender for fear of death what he again and again admitted to be but an opinion. He would lay no burden on the souls of other men: he would not speak against the new laws, the divorce, the King's marriage, the measures by which the Church was freed from foreign subjection. These were matters upon which his own views had changed, and upon which he could not feel that his judgment need be final or binding for other men. He condemned no man; but he would not yield an inch himself. To him almost alone among his contemporaries the conclusions of the intellect seemed no less sacred than the chastity of the body. He died rather than tarnish the whiteness of his soul.

His position was the more noble because some of his dearest friends were not of his mind. Colet had spoken too freely for us to doubt that he would not thus have interpreted the historic claim of Rome. On Erasmus the critic the Papal authority sat but lightly. Tunstal declared clearly that "the Church of Rome had never of old such a monarchy as of late it hath usurped."<sup>1</sup> But the foreign scholars to whom he had appealed were, from the first, in almost every case in his favour.<sup>2</sup> Lutherans condemned him as an enemy of the Gospel,<sup>3</sup> but Italians saw in him a martyr and a saint.<sup>4</sup> Gregory XIII. in 1572 did honour to his memory, but it was not till December 29, 1886, that a decree of Beatification was issued from Rome.

<sup>1</sup> E.g. Abbats Whiting and others; cf. Gasquet's The Last Abbot of Glastonbury, p. 47.

More's fame did not wait for such tardy honours. He had been for many years renowned among the writers of Europe. It may be doubted indeed if any event in English history since the murder of S. Thomas

<sup>1</sup> I venture to quote the passage from Fr. Bridgett's valuable Life of More, p. 347, who has taken the extract from British Museum MS. Cleopatra, E. vi. f. 389. Tunstal states that the meaning of the Royal Supremacy was "to reducē the Church of England out of all captivity of foreign powers, heretofore usurped therein, into the pristine estate that all Churches of all realms were in at the beginning, and to abolish and clearly put away such usurpation as theretofore the Bishops of Rome have, to their great advantage and impoverishing of the realm and the king's subjects, of the same. . . . Would to God you had been exercised in reading the ancient councils, that you might have known from the beginning, from age to age, the continuance and progress of the Catholic Church, by which you should have perceived that the Church of Rome had never of old such a monarchy as of late it hath usurped."

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Letter of Cochlaeus to Henry VIII., Leipzig, 1536. Letters and Papers, x. 34.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Letters and Papers, x. 587

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Poem of Zenobio Cefino (see Letters and Papers, x. 844).

of Canterbury had excited such universal interest abroad. Letter after letter published throughout the Continent proclaimed his merits and deplored the barbarity of his death. An "expositio fidelis de morte Thomae Mori," appeared before the year was out. Almost every foreign nation issued its own record of his pathetic fate. Erasmus called heaven and earth to witness against the monstrous cruelty of the King, and Pole in his bitter remonstrance on the Unity of the Church cried out, "You have slain, you have slain, the best Englishman alive."

The excitement aroused by his execution was felt to be a real political danger. The King caused a formal defence of his action to be put forth. For years after the State Papers show how minute was the investigation into any circumstances which seemed to show personal association with the murdered man.<sup>1</sup> From the first his memory was regarded in England with extraordinary reverence. But strange to say, no certain record of his burial is preserved, and it is not even clear whether the story of Margaret Roper's devotion which Tennyson has made immortal is more than a pathetic fiction.<sup>2</sup>

A number of relics of him were preserved, many of which are now at Stonyhurst.<sup>3</sup> His descendants were careful to claim kinship to the martyr. It is a common thing to see on the tombs of even remote kindred in different parts of England some reference to the stock of the great man from which they came.<sup>1</sup> In the male line the family became extinct with the death of Father Thomas More, sometime English provincial of the Jesuits, in 1795. His sister, Bridget More, by her marriage with Peter Metcalfe, left a daughter who is represented by the Eyston family of East Hendred. There are probably many descendants of More in the female line. The male line of the Ropers died out, but females of their families became ancestresses of the Winns, Constables and others.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> E. g. Letters and Papers, vol. xiii. pt. i. Feb. 30, 1538; pt. ii. 695, 702, 828, 854.

<sup>2</sup> The whole question is exhaustively discussed by Fr. Bridgett, pp. 435 sqq.

<sup>3</sup> See Fr. Bridgett's Life of More, Appendix A.

The multiplication of portraits is a prominent proof of the permanent interest taken in the great man's memory. The fame of such a man was indeed what neither England nor the world would willingly let die.

"The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud if our faults whipped them not." More's character was not faultless. In his youth indeed he wrote not a little that his religion in later life must have deplored. He was beset by keen temptations of the flesh. But certainly the spirit triumphed. His life was not without its mistakes; but no man ever redeemed his errors more nobly. A great historian has said that there are no famous men of the sixteenth century whom it is possible wholly to admire;<sup>1</sup> but it is difficult not to claim that More forms an exception to this stern judgment. The fascination which won the hearts of his contemporaries affects even the least emotional of his biographers. Admiration is no sufficient tribute: we love him as if he were our own friend.

<sup>1</sup> A curious instance of this is afforded by a slab in Brize-Norton Church, Oxfordshire, in memory of "Thomas Greenwood, e Thoma More olim Angl. Cancell. Oriundus," who died in 1678.

<sup>2</sup> See Fr. Bridgett's Life, Appendix E, and Hunter's edition of Cresacre More's Life, Preface, part iv.; and Auction Catalogue of Books of Baron von Druffel (Munster, 1894).

Of such a character it is difficult to speak critically. His was not a mind of the subtlety which is the fit subject for psychological analysis. The leading lines stand clearly out. He was a man of very single-minded purpose, laboriously studious and conscientious in public as in private life. Deeply reverent and truly pious, he had yet a keen sense of the follies of his fellow-men; but his mirth was that of the humorist, not the cynic. He was sensitive and therefore observant; affectionate and of a beautiful patience. Few men have had more power of inspiring love. His wide tastes—learned, musical, scientific—no doubt helped to win him so wide a fame; but the deepest cause was the beauty of his life. His character, perfect as it is, is delightful chiefly because it is so natural. There was never in him anything strained or affected, weak imitation of others, or striving after what he couldn ever be. Its beautiful calmness, its even tenor, the peace that seems always to hang over it, make it easy to forget the troublous scenes in which his life was passed. It was an age of fightings and fears. More passed through the thick of them; and no man, it may be said truly, passed through so unscathed. Well may his reverent descendant proclaim that "his soul was carried by angels into everlasting glory, where a crown of martyrdom was put on him which can never fade nor decay."

<sup>1</sup> Bishop Creighton, in the Laud Commemoration Volume, p. 14—"It is well to abandon all illusions about the sixteenth century. There were strong men, there were powerful minds, but there was a dearth of beautiful characters. A time of revolt and upheaval is a time of one-sided energy, and of moral uncertainty, of hardness, of unsound argument, of imperfect self-control, of vacillation, of self-seeking. It is difficult in such a time to find heroes, to discover a man whom we can unreservedly admire." In delivering his lecture the Bishop added emphatically, "I know none."

No estimate of More's life would be satisfactory which did not consider his position and his influence in relation to the great movements of his age. Posterity will here rank him at least as highly as did his contemporaries. No one who reverences the heritage of faith bequeathed to the Christian Church will remember him without gratitude. He was placed suddenly in face of a critical question. He answered it as his successors in the English Church would not now answer. He wrote as a lawyer, trusting for his knowledge of the early Church mainly to the Canon Law, of which the forged Decretals were then an integral part. As a lawyer he accepted his authorities: he did not criticize them as a theologian. But it would be difficult to find in his writings any formal statement of doctrine which the English Church since his day has ever formally abandoned. It would be idle indeed to dispute with Roman hagiologists their right to revere him as a martyr of their own; but no true theological estimate would deny that he belongs to the historic and continuous Church of England. A close study of his religious writings, as of his life, shows that More was a saint of whom England may still be proud.

As a man of letters he has claims as great upon the reverence of literary men. It would not be a mistake to regard him as the founder of modern English literature. His fresh and vigorous use of a vocabulary hardly any part of which is yet obsolete, his power of narration, of declamation, and of criticism, make him to stand out among the earliest masters of English prose. As a scholar he linked the learning of the Renaissance to the faith of the medieval Church, and he brought classical interests within the range of ordinary English men of affairs. He was one of the first of our fathers to whom rightly belonged the titles of a scholar and a gentleman.

Most of all, perhaps, he will be remembered as the years go on for his passionate ideal of social progress. So long as men suffer and thinkers search for remedies for human misery and human sin, the author of the Utopia is immortal. And it should never be forgotten that the social ideal which he gave to the world came from a heart and a mind stored with practical statesmanship and Christian theology.

INDEX

- ALINGTON, SIR GILES, 58
Ammonius, 54, 68, 69, 126, 163
Annates Act passed, 180
Anne, Queen (Bullen), 230, 240, 261
Antwerp, the Commission at, 147
Apology of Sir Thomas More, 151, 219, 222, 225
Arthur, Prince, 14, 24, 197
Ascham, Nicholas, 44
Audley, Sir Thomas, succeeds More as Chancellor, 182, 241, 248, 262, 264
Bainham, 217, 221
Basle, 70, 84, 86, 87
Bayfield, 217
Beaumont, Viscount, 148
Bell, Dr., 150
Bilney, 206, 217
Blackfriars, Parliament held at, 155, 173
Bonvisi, Antonio, 84, 274
Boulogne, siege of, 165
Bourchier, Cardinal, 7
Bridgett, Father, author of Life of Sir Thomas More, 38, 278
Brixius, a French poet, 74, 100, 101
Bronchorst, Gerard, 70
Bruges, 146, 153, 154, 155
Bucklersbury, 38, 62, 64
Budaens, 60, 71, 81, 83, 84, 99
Bungenhagen, 200
Busleiden, Jerome (Buslidius), 82, 84, 99, 100
Calais, Embassy sent to, 150, 164
Cambrai, treaty of, 168
Campiaggio, 148, 167
Cardinal College, 106
Carmen gratulatorium, 41, 101
Caxton, the printer, 190
Chaleondylas, 15
Chapuys, 175, 176, 179, 181
Charles, V., 145, 154, 168, 179
Charterhouse, the, 21, 22
Charterhouse, Fathers of the, 234; are condemned by the King, 256; executed, 257
Chelsea, 45, 46, 81, 86
Chordigera, a poem by Brixius, 100
Christ Church, Oxford, 14
Clement VII., 178
Clement, John, 58, 81
Clifford, John, 146
Colet, John, 6, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 25, 30, 38, 69, 73, 74, 77, 78, 81, 187, 188, 208, 277
Colt, John, Sir Thomas More's father-in-law, 37
Confutation, by Sir Thomas More, 223, 224, 225
Corneo, Andrea, 31, 36
Coverdale, Miles, 227
Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, 76, 238, 241, 244, 258
Cromwell, Thomas, 160, 229, 230, 231, 234, 235, 237, 238, 241, 244, 250, 253, 254, 256, 257, 258, 259, 262
Dauncey, Elizabeth, Sir Thomas More's daughter, 57, 87, 88, 271, 272
Debellation of Salem and Bizanee, by Sir Thomas More, 225 Dialogue, A, of Sir Thomas More, 202, 209, 210, 212, 213, 214, 215, 222, 223

- Dorpius, 16
 Dudley, chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, 24 ; executed, 41
 Dynham, Sir John, 56
 Edward VI., 16
 Elizabeth, wife of Henry VII., died February 1503, 22
 Ellen of Tottenham, 233
 Empson, 24, 41
Encomium Moriae, 65, 68, 77, 84, 85
Epistolae Obscurorum Virorum, 28, 115
 Erasmus, friend of Sir Thomas More's, 3 ; at Oxford, 14, 18 ; tutor to William Blount, 19 ; his great friendship for More, 20, 64 ; leaves England, 21, 22, 28, 38 ; on More's appearance, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48 ; dedicates his translation of Aristotle to Sir Thomas More's only son, John, 56 ; his letter to Hutten, 60, 62 ; his Moria, 65, 67 ; at Cambridge, 68 ; leaves England, 69 ; returns to England, 70, 71, 73, 74 ; his illness, 75 ; proves his friendship for More, 76, 79, 80, 82, 84, 85, 87 ; his New Testament, 100 ; his opinion of the cause of the plague, 127, 141 ; his description of More's conduct as Under-Sheriff of London, 143 ; letter from More to Erasmus, 147, 148 ; writes to Tunstal, 149 ; his letter to Ægidius, 152, 153, 162 ; condemns Wolsey, 163, 164, 184, 185, 187 ; opposes the foreign reformers, 188, 189, 223, 224, 278, 279
 Exeter, Bishop of, 57
 Field, John, 218, 219
 Fish, Simon, 214
 Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, 69, 70, 73, 81, 149, 156, 232, 244, 251, 255, 260, 262, 263, 265, 266
 Fitzwilliam, Sir William, 230
 Fox, Bishop of Winchester, Keeper of Privy Seal, 25, 144, 156, 217, 219, 221
 Francesco, Gian, nephew of Pico, 30, 33, 36, 191
 Francis I., 83, 168
 French Commissioners, the, 153
 Frith, John, 222, 225
 Froben, the printer, 70, 84, 85
 Froude, Mr., 178, 201, 216, 217, 218, 219, 222
 Gardiner, Stephen, Archdeacon of Taunton, 168, 213
 Giggs, Margaret, wife of John Clement, 58, 88, 271, 272
 Giustiniani, the Venetian Ambassador, 92, 153
 Gloucester, Richard, Duke of, 108, 109
 Goclenius, 200
 Granfylde, 240
 Granger, Agnes, mother of Sir Thomas More, 5, 82
 Groeyn, William, 14, 16, 21, 27, 38, 73, 102, 104
 Gunnell, William, tutor to More's children, 58
 Hall, 161, 173, 175
 Harpsfield, 17, 43, 46
 Hassia, Henriens de, 190
 Henry VII., 14, 42, 101, 110, 122, 144
 Henry VIII., 4, 5, 39, 40, 41, 42, 75, 82, 83, 93, 101, 103, 118, 122, 135, 178, 196, 197, 229, 230, 232, 238, 239, 244, 273
 Henry, son of Henry VIII., created Duke of Richmond, 160
 Herbert of Cherbury, Lord, 160, 161, 210

- Heron, Giles, son-in-law of Sir Thomas More, 49, 57
- Heywood, Ellis, his Il Moro, 63, 82
- Holbein, 17, 43, 44, 47, 75, 84, 85, 86, 87, 273
- Holinshed, 110
- Holt, Nicholas, schoolmaster, 6
- Hooker, Richard, 190, 210
- Hutten, Ulrich von, 20, 60, 71, 144
- Institutio Principis Christiani*, 70
- Joy, George, punished by More, 220
- Julius II., Pope, 66, 67
- Katherine, Queen, 42, 179, 197, 261
- Kent, the Nun of, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 238, 244
- Kingston, Sir William, the Constable of the Tower, 269, 270
- Knight, Dr. William, 152
- Latimer, Hugh, 213, 242
- Latimer, William, 6, 18, 78, 80, 121
- Leigh, Joyeuce, 36
- Leo X., Pope, 67
- Lilly, William, friend of More, 21, 27, 28, 38, 78, 98
- Linacre, 15, 16, 18, 21, 27, 38, 78, 102
- Lineolne, John, 150
- London, Stokesley, Bishop of, 168, 218
- Lupset, 81; brings out a second edition of Utopia in Paris, 83
- Luther, Martin, 166, 189, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 202, 203, 208, 209, 213
- Lydgate, 22
- Mackintosh, Sir James, Life of More, 11, 176
- Margaret, daughter of Henry VII., 24
- Medici, Lorenzo de', 31, 32
- Memorare novissima et in aeternum non pccabis*, by Sir Thomas More, 188.
- Metcalfe, Peter, 280
- Middleton, Aliee, the second wife of Sir Thomas More, 54, 55, 87, 247, 248, 253
- Mirandola, Pico della, 2, 3, 14, 23, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 191
- More, Bridget, sister of Father Thomas More, and wife of Peter Metcalfe, 280
- More, Cicely, daughter of Sir Thomas More, wife of Giles Heron, 39, 57, 87, 88, 90, 271
- More, Cresacre, great-grandson of Sir Thomas More, 5, 21, 43, 55, 56, 59, 171, 172, 198, 267
- More, Elizabeth, sister of Sir Thomas More, 5
- More, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas More, 39; marries Mr. Dauncey, 57, 87, 90
- More, Joan, sister of Sir Thomas More, 5
- More, Sir John, father of Sir Thomas More, 4, 5, 17, 25, 59; his death, 180
- More, John, son of Sir Thomas More, born 1509, 39, 55; marries Anne Cresacre, 56, 272
- More, John, grandfather of Sir Thomas More, 5
- More, Father Thomas, descendant of Sir Thomas More, 280
- More, Sir Thomas, his birth, 4; childhood, 11; schooldays, 11; entered Canterbury College, 14, 15, 16, 17; left Oxford, 18; entered New Inn, 18; admitted student at Lincoln's Inn, 19; called to the Bar, 19, 20, 21; appointed reader at Furnival's Inn, 21, 22; returned to Parliament,

22 ; wrote poetical lament on the death of the Queen, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28 ; influenced by the Italian Renaissance, 29, 30, 33 ; marries, 37 ; his fame, 39 ; his prosperity, 48 ; poems on accession of Henry VIII., 41 ; his appearance and character, 43 ; returns from the Netherlands, 49 ; letter to his wife, 49 ; his second marriage, 54 ; his filial reverence, 59 ; his home, 60 ; friendship with Erasmus, 64 ; sent on a mission to Bruges, 69 ; letter to a monk, 72 ; his work as Chancellor, 75 ; resigns the Chancellorship, 75 ; is imprisoned, 76 ; his friends, 76, 86 ; his epigrams, 98, 104 ; quarrels with Brixius, 100, 102 ; his letter to the "Fathers and Proctors" of the Oxford University, 104, 105 ; appointed High Steward of the University, 105 ; his History of Richard III., 106, 109 ; his position as an historian, 110 ; his Utopia, and whence the groundwork of it was derived, 111, 116 ; his opinion as to the punishment of thieves, 118, 120 ; his theory as to the duty of a king, 121, 123 ; the government of Utopia ; 125, 129 ; the Utopians' mode of life and education, 129, 131, 132, 136, 138, 139, 140 ; writes to Erasmus, 141 ; elected Under-Sheriff of London, 143 ; becomes Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, 144 ; goes to Flanders, 146 ; returns to England, 147 ; writes to Erasmus, 147, 148 ; requested to enter the Royal Service, 149 ; appointed Master of Requests, and member of the Privy Council ; 149 ; his connexion with the riots in London 150 : his apology, 151, 152 ; goes to Calais to negotiate with the French merchants, 152, 153 ; returns to England, 153 ; signs treaty between England and France, 153 ; meets the Emperor at Canterbury, 154 ; tricks the boastful Fleming, 154 ; is knighted and made Treasurer of the Exchequer, is one of the King's chief secretaries, 154 ; receives the manor of South, and is chosen Speaker of the House of Commons, 155 ; his speech in Parliament, 157, 158, 159 ; receives mark of royal gratitude, 159, 160 ; receives gift from the Exchequer, 162 ; his letters to Wolsey, 164, 165 ; signs "treaty of the More," and appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, 166 ; his speeches with the King, 166 ; confers with the Bishops of Durham and Bath concerning Henry's intended divorce, 166, 167 ; goes to Canterbury, 168 ; receives the great seal, and takes the oaths, 171 ; appointed Chancellor, 172 ; his opening speech, 173, 175 ; his duties as Chancellor and in the Court of Chancery, 176, 177 ; supports Queen Katherine, 179 ; resigns Chancellorship, 180 ; his poverty, 181, 183 ; his religious works, 184 ; condemns the position of the foreign reformers, 188 ; led into religious controversy by the King, 196 ; defends Henry against Luther, 198, 200 ; defends the Church against the attacks of the English reformers, 202 ; his Dialogue, 202, 209 ; extracts from his Dialogue, 210, 212, 213 : his Supplication of Souls,

- 214, 215 ; his duties as Lord Chancellor oblige him to attend the examination of heretics, 215, 222 ; his reply to Tyndale, 223 ; enunciates the dogma of the Pope's infallibility, 225 ; resigns the Chancellorship, 225 ; refuses help from the clergy, 226, 227, 228 ; appointed Sheriff for Somerset and Dorset, 229 ; counsels Cromwell how to act towards Henry, 229, 230 ; refuses his consent to Henry's marriage, 230 ; accused of corruption, 230, 231 ; interview with the Nun of Kent, 233 ; writes to Cromwell and to the King, 235 ; and again to Cromwell, 235, 237 ; is examined, 238, 239 ; his troubles, 240 ; fresh troubles arise, 240 ; summoned before the Commissioners, 241 ; committed to the abbat of Westminster's custody, 244 ; refuses the oath, and is committed to the Tower, 245 ; is visited there by his wife Alice, 247, 248 ; all his possessions taken away, 252, 253 ; his writings whilst imprisoned, 254, 255 ; his letter to his daughter, 255, 256 ; before Cromwell and others, 256, 259 ; still further examined, 259, 260 ; before a Special Commission, 262 ; the indictment, 263 ; his reply to same, 264, 269 ; is found guilty, 267 ; sad partings, 270, 271 ; his letter to his daughter Margaret, 271, 272 ; his last days, 273, 276 ; his death, 276
- Morton, Cardinal, 7—11, 14, 24, 107, 109, 120
- Mountjoy, Lord, William Blount, pupil and friend of Erasmus, 19, 21, 73
- Norfolk, Duke of, 52, 168, 170, 171, 180, 219, 238, 240, 262, 264, 268
- Novum Instrumentum*, Erasmus's edition, 65, 69, 185
- Oxford, sickness breaks out at, 126 ; More's relations with the University, 104, sqq.
- Oxymorus, suggested by Budaeus as a name for Sir Thomas More, 83
- Pace, friend of More, 18, 73, 80 ; writes to Wolsey, 153, 154, 185, 196
- Pacifier*, the, written by Saint-german, 225
- Palmer, Mr., 259, 267
- Parnell, accuses More of accepting a bribe, 231
- Petrus Egidius (Peter Giles), friend of More, 71, 82, 84 ; his association with the Utopia, 112, 115, 147, 152
- Philips, Thomas, 218
- Piers Ploughman, 142
- Pirchheimer, Bilibald, 99
- Pole, Reginald, Cardinal, 56, 81, 279
- Poliziano, 1, 15, 30, 33
- Pope, Sir Thomas, 273, 274
- Rastell, John, the poet and printer, husband of Elizabeth More, 5, 106
- Rastell, William, nephew of Sir Thomas More, 231
- Reformation, the, 3, 14, 28, 76, 154, 188, 190, 199, 201
- Renaissance, the, 3, 14, 28, 139
- Reshye, Father, 232
- Reuchlin, 70
- Rich, Father, 232
- Rich, the Solicitor-General, 259, 260, 261, 263, 266, 267
- Richard III.*, History of, by Sir Thomas More, 69, 97, 110
- Robinson, Ralph, his translation of the Utopia, 111, 114 sqq., 131

- Roper, William, 9, 17, 24, 25, 37, 52, 55 ; marries More's daughter Margaret, 56, 59, 93, 94, 154, 155, 156, 159, 164, 168, 169, 171, 172, 175, 177, 226, 227, 229, 235, 238, 239, 242, 247, 270
- Rufull Lamentation*, written by Sir Thomas More, 14, 22
- Sagudino, Nicolo, Secretary to Giustiniani, 92
- Saintgerman, a lawyer, author of The Pacifier, 225
- S. Mary Hall, Oxford, 14
- St. Oswald, Lord, his picture at Nostell Priory, 88
- Salisbury, Countess of, 81
- Sampson, Dr., Vicar-general of Tournay, 146
- Savonarola, 31, 32, 36, 199
- Scotland, 164
- Seebohm, Mr. F., 134, 186, 187, 197
- Shore, Jane, 109
- Sion, Fathers of, 232, 234
- Southwell, Sir Richard, 259, 267
- Spynell, Sir Thomas, 146
- Stafferton, Richard, husband of Joan More, 5, 83
- Standish, Dr., 150
- Stapleton, Dr., Tres Thomas, 6, 21, 26, 58, 99, 104
- Stow, 110
- Strype, 221, 222
- Succession, Act of, passed, 241 ; second do. do. 247
- Suffolk, Charles Brandon, Duke of 171, 258, 263
- Supplication of Souls*, by Sir Thomas More, 214, 219
- Supremacy, Act of, 277
- Thierry, publisher of Utopia, 70
- Tunstal, Cuthbert, Master of the Rolls, Archdeacon of Chester, and Bishop of Durham, 78, 79, 80, 92, 141, 145, 146, 147, 149, 155, 168, 202, 213, 230, 278
- Tyndale, William, 20, 202, 203 ; his New Testament, 207, 208, 212, 213, 222 ; attacks More, 222, 223, 224, 225
- Utopia*, 23, 47, 48, 61, 70, 72, 79, 83, 84, 85, 97, 110 sqq., 131, 134, 142, 147, 149, 185, 186, 188, 208, 209, 283
- Vergil, Polydore, 74, 84
- Vespucci, Amerigo, 2, 3, 112
- Walsingham, Edward, Lieut. of the Tower, 262, 274, 275
- Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, 69, 70, 71, 73, 76, 78, 144, 213, 232
- Whiting, Abbat, 252
- Wilson, Dr., one of the King's chaplains, 243, 252
- Winchester, Bishop of, 230
- Wingfield, Sir Richard, 152 ; his death, 166
- Wiltshire, Earl of, father of Queen Anne, 231, 258, 262
- Wolsey, Cardinal, 3, 4, 18, 69, 74, 94, 105, 106, 126, 127, 145, 146, 148, 149, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 168, 170, 171, 173, 175, 189, 216, 232
- Wood, John, More's servant, 245
- Wydville, Anthony (Earl Rivers), 190

W. H. WHITE AND CO. LTD,
RIVERSIDE PRESS, EDINBURGH

A CATALOGUE OF BOOKS PUBLISHED BY METHUEN AND COMPANY: LONDON

36 ESSEX STREET

W.C.

CONTENTS

	PAGE		PAGE
GENERAL LITERATURE, . . . .	2-20	LITTLE BOOKS ON ART, . . . .	26
ANTIQUARY'S BOOKS, . . . .	20	LITTLE GALLERIES, . . . .	26
BEGINNER'S BOOKS, . . . .	20	LITTLE GUIDES, . . . .	27
BUSINESS BOOKS, . . . .	20	LITTLE LIBRARY, . . . .	27
BYZANTINE TEXTS, . . . .	21	METHUEN'S MINIATURE LIBRARY,	28
CHURCHMAN'S BIBLE, . . . .	21	OXFORD BIOGRAPHIES, . . . .	28
CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY, . . . .	21	SCHOOL EXAMINATION SERIES, . .	29
CLASSICAL TRANSLATIONS, . . . .	22	SOCIAL QUESTIONS OF TO-DAY, . .	29
COMMERCIAL SERIES, . . . .	22	TEXTBOOKS OF TECHNOLOGY, . .	29
CONNOISSEUR'S LIBRARY, . . . .	23	HANDBOOKS OF THEOLOGY, . .	30
LIBRARY OF DEVOTION, . . . .	23	METHUEN'S UNIVERSAL LIBRARY,	30
ILLUSTRATED POCKET LIBRARY OF		WESTMINSTER COMMENTARIES, . .	31
PLAIN AND COLOURED BOOKS, . .	23
JUNIOR EXAMINATION SERIES, . .	25	FICTION, . . . . .	32-40
METHUEN'S JUNIOR SCHOOL-BOOKS, .	25	METHUEN'S SHILLING NOVELS, . .	39
LEADERS OF RELIGION, . . . .	26	BOOKS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS, . .	40
LITTLE BLUE BOOKS, . . . .	26	NOVELS OF ALEXANDRE DUMAS, .	40

FEBRUARY 1905

A CATALOGUE OF MESSRS. METHUEN'S PUBLICATIONS

Colonial Editions are published of all Messrs. METHUEN'S Novels issued at a price above 2s. 6d., and similar editions are published of some works of General Literature. These are marked in the Catalogue. Colonial editions are only for circulation in the British Colonies and India.

An asterisk denotes that a book is in the Press.

PART I.—GENERAL LITERATURE

Abbot (Jacob). See Little Blue Books.

Acatos (M. J.). Modern Language Master at King Edward School, Birmingham.
See Junior School Books.

Adams (Frank). JACK SPRATT. With 24 Coloured Pictures. Super Royal 16mo. 2s.

Adeney (W. F.), M.A. See Bennett and Adeney.

Æschylus. See Classical Translations.

Æsop. See Illustrated Pocket Library.

Ainsworth (W. Harrison). See Illustrated Pocket Library.

*Alderson (J. P.). MR. ASQUITH. With Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

Alexander (William), D.D. Archbishop of Armagh. THOUGHTS AND COUNSELS

OF MANY YEARS. Selected by J. H. BURN, B.D. Demy 16mo. 2s. 6d.

Alken (Henry). THE NATIONAL SPORTS OF GREAT BRITAIN. With descriptions in English and French. With 50 Coloured Plates. Royal Folio. Five Guineas net.

See Illustrated Pocket Library.

Allen (Jessie). See Little Books on Art.

Allen (J. Romilly), F.S.A. See Antiquary's Books.

Almack (E.). See Little Books on Art.

Amherst (Lady). A SKETCH OF EGYPTIAN HISTORY FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PRESENT DAY. With many Illustrations, some of which are in Colour. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

Anderson (F. M.). THE STORY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE FOR CHILDREN. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s.

Andrewes (Bishop). PRECES PRIVATAE. Edited, with Notes, by F. E. BRIGHTMAN, M.A., of Pusey House, Oxford. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Aristophanes. THE FROGS. Translated into English by E. W. HUNTINGFORD, M.A., Professor of Classics in Trinity College, Toronto. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

Aristotle. THE NICOMACHEAN ETHICS. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by JOHN BURNET, M.A., Professor of Greek at St. Andrews. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

Ashton (R.). See Little Blue Books.

Atkins (H. G.). See Oxford Biographies.

Atkinson (C. M.). JEREMY BENTHAM. Crown 8vo. 5s.

A biography of this great thinker, and an estimate of his work and influence.

Atkinson (T. D.). A SHORT HISTORY OF ENGLISH ARCHITECTURE. With over 200 Illustrations by the Author and others. Fac. 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.

Aurelius (Marcus). See Methuen's Universal Library.

Austen (Jane). See Little Library and Methuen's Universal Library.

Aves (Ernest). See Books on Business.

Bacon (Francis). See Little Library and Methuen's Universal Library.

Baden-Powell (R. S. S.), Major-General. THE DOWNFALL OF PREMPEH. A Diary of Life in Ashanti, 1895. With 21 Illustrations and a Map. Third Edition. Large Crown 8vo. 6s.

A Colonial Edition is also published.

- THE MATABELE CAMPAIGN, 1896. With nearly 100 Illustrations. Fourth and Cheaper Edition. Large Crown 8vo. 6s.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Baker (W. G.), M.A. See Junior Examination Series.
- Baker (Julian L.), F.I.C., F.C.S. See Books on Business.
- Balfour (Graham). THE LIFE OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Second Edition. Two Volumes. Demy 8vo. 25s. net.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Bally (S. E.). See Commercial Series.
- Banks (Elizabeth L.). THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A 'NEWSPAPER GIRL. With a Portrait of the Author and her Dog. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Barham (R. H.). See Little Library.
- Baring-Gould (S.). Author of 'Mehalah,' etc. THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE. With over 450 Illustrations in the Text, and 12 Photogravure Plates. Gilt top. Large quarto. 36s.
- THE TRAGEDY OF THE CÆSARS. With numerous Illustrations from Busts, Gems, Cameos, etc. Fifth Edition. Royal 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- A BOOK OF FAIRY TALES. With numerous Illustrations and Initial Letters by ARTHUR J. GASKIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. Buckram. 6s.
- A BOOK OF BRITTANY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 Uniform in scope and size with Mr. Baring-Gould's well-known books on Devon, Cornwall, and Dartmoor.
- OLD ENGLISH FAIRY TALES. With numerous Illustrations by F. D. BEDFORD. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. Buckram. 6s.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- THE VICAR OF MORWENSTOW: A Biography. A new and Revised Edition. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
 A completely new edition of the well-known biography of R. S. Hawker.
- DARTMOOR: A Descriptive and Historical Sketch. With Plans and numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE BOOK OF THE WEST. With numerous Illustrations. Two volumes. Vol. I. Devon. Second Edition. Vol. II. Cornwall. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s. each.
- A BOOK OF NORTH WALES. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 This book is uniform with Mr. Baring-Gould's books on Devon, Dartmoor, and Brittany.
- *A BOOK OF SOUTH WALES. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A BOOK OF GHOSTS. With 8 Illustrations by D. Murray Smith. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- OLD COUNTRY LIFE. With 67 Illustrations. Fifth Edition. Large Crown 8vo. 6s.
- *AN OLD ENGLISH HOME. With numerous Plans and Illustrations. Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- *YORKSHIRE ODDITIES AND STRANGE EVENTS. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- *STRANGE SURVIVALS AND SUPERSTITIONS. Third Edition. Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- A GARLAND OF COUNTRY SONG: English Folk Songs with their Traditional Melodies. Collected and arranged by S. BARING-GOULD and H. F. SHEPPARD. Demy 4to. 6s.
- SONGS OF THE WEST: Traditional Ballads and Songs of the West of England, with their Melodies. Collected by S. BARING-GOULD, M.A., and H. F. SHEPPARD, M.A. In 4 Parts. Parts I., II., III., 2s. 6d. each. Part IV., 4s. In One Volume, French Morocco, 10s. net.; Roan, 15s.
 See also The Little Guides.
- Barker (Aldred F.), Author of 'Pattern Analysis,' etc. See Textbooks of Technology.
- Barnes (W. E.), D.D., Hulsean Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. See Churchman's Bible.
- Barnett (Mrs. P. A.). See Little Library.
- Baron (R. R. N.), M.A. FRENCH PROSE COMPOSITION. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. Key, 3s. net. See also Junior School Books.
- Barron (H. M.), M.A., Wadham College, Oxford. TEXTS FOR SERMONS. With a Preface by Canon SCOTT HOLLAND. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Bastable (C. F.), M.A., Professor of Economics at Trinity College, Dublin. See Social Questions Series.
- Batson (Mrs. Stephen). A BOOK OF THE COUNTRY AND THE GARDEN. Illustrated by F. CARRUTHERS GOULD and A. C. GOULD. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- A CONCISE HANDBOOK OF GARDEN FLOWERS. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

- *Batten (Loring W.). Ph.D., S.T.D., Rector of St. Mark's Church, New York; sometime Professor in the Philadelphia Divinity School. THE HEBREW PROPHET. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Beaman (A. Hulme). PONS ASINORUM; OR, A GUIDE TO BRIDGE. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- Beard (W. S.). See Junior Examination Series.
- EASY EXERCISES IN ARITHMETIC. Arranged by. Cr. 8vo. Without Answers, 1s. With Answers, 1s. 3d.
- Beckford (Peter). THOUGHTS ON HUNTING. Edited by J. OTHO PAGET, and Illustrated by G. H. JALLAND. Second and Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo. 6s.
- Beckford (William). See Little Library.
- Beeching (H. C.), M.A. Canon of Westminster. See Library of Devotion.
- Behmen (Jacob). THE SUPERSENSUAL LIFE. Edited by BERNARD HOLLAND. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Belloc (Hilaire). PARIS. With Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Bellot (H. H. L.), M.A. THE INNER AND MIDDLE TEMPLE. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s. net.
- See also L. A. A. Jones.
- Bennett (W. H.), M.A. A PRIMER OF THE BIBLE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Bennett (W. H.) and Adeney (W. F.). A BIBLICAL INTRODUCTION. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Benson (Archbishop). GOD'S BOARD: Communion Addresses. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Benson (A. C.), M.A. See Oxford Biographies.
- Benson (R. M.). THE WAY OF HOLINESS: a Devotional Commentary on the 119th Psalm. Crown 8vo. 5s.
- Bernard (E. R.), M.A. Canon of Salisbury. THE ENGLISH SUNDAY. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Bertouch (Baroness de). THE LIFE OF FATHER IGNATIUS, O.S.B., THE MONK OF LLANTHONY. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Bethune-Baker (J. F.), M.A. Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. See Handbooks of Theology.
- Bidez (M.). See Byzantine Texts.
- Biggs (C. R. D.), D.D. See Churchman's Bible.
- Bindley (T. Herbert), B.D. THE OECUMENICAL DOCUMENTS OF THE FAITH. With Introductions and Notes. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A historical account of the Creeds.
- Binyon (Laurence). THE DEATH OF ADAM, AND OTHER POEMS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Birnstingl (Ethel). See Little Books on Art.
- Blair (Robert). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Blake (William). See Illustrated Pocket Library and Little Library.
- Blaxland (B.), M.A. See Library of Devotion.
- Bloom (T. Harvey), M.A. SHAKESPEARE'S GARDEN. With Illustrations. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.; leather, 4s. 6d. net.
- Blouet (Henri). See The Beginner's Books.
- Boardman (T. H.). See Text Books of Technology.
- Bodley (J. E. C.), Author of 'France.' THE CORONATION OF EDWARD VII. Demy 8vo. 21s. net. By Command of the King.
- Body (George), D.D. THE SOUL'S PILGRIMAGE: Devotional Readings from his published and unpublished writings. Selected and arranged by J. H. BURN, B.D. F.R.S.E. Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Bona (Cardinal). See Library of Devotion.
- Boon (F. C.). See Commercial Series.
- Borrow (George). See Little Library.
- Bos (J. Ritzenma). AGRICULTURAL ZOOLOGY. Translated by J. R. AINSWORTH DAVIS, M.A. With an Introduction by ELEANOR A. ORMEROD, F.E.S. With 155 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.
- Botting (C. G.), B.A. EASY GREEK EXERCISES. Crown 8vo. 2s. See also Junior Examination Series.
- Boulton (E. S.). GEOMETRY ON MODERN LINES. Crown 8vo. 2s.
- Bowden (E. M.). THE IMITATION OF BUDDHA: Being Quotations from Buddhist Literature for each Day in the Year. Fourth Edition. Crown 16mo. 2s. 6d.

- Boyle (W.). CHRISTMAS AT THE ZOO. With Verses by W. BOYLE and 24 Coloured Pictures by H. B. NEILSON. Super Royal 16mo. 2s.
- Brabant (F. G.), M.A. See The Little Guides.
- Brodrick (Mary) and Morton (Anderson). A CONCISE HANDBOOK OF EGYPTIAN ARCHÆOLOGY. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Brooke (A. S.), M.A. SLINGSBY AND SLINGSBY CASTLE. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Brooks (E. W.). See Byzantine Tests.
- Brown (P. H.). Fraser Professor of Ancient (Scottish) History at the University of Edinburgh. SCOTLAND IN THE TIME OF QUEEN MARY. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Browne (Sir Thomas). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Brownell (C. L.). THE HEART OF JAPAN. Illustrated. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.; also Demy 8vo. 6d.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Browning (Robert). See Little Library.
- Buckland (Francis T.). CURIOSITIES OF NATURAL HISTORY. With Illustrations by HARRY B. NEILSON. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Buckton (A. M.). THE BURDEN OF ENGELA: a Ballad-Epic. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- EAGER HEART: A Mystery Play. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. net.
- Budge (E. A. Wallis). THE GODS OF THE EGYPTIANS. With over 100 Coloured Plates and many Illustrations. Two Volumes. Royal 8vo. £3, 3s. net.
- Bull (Paul), Army Chaplain. GOD AND OUR SOLDIERS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Bulley (Miss). See Social Questions Series.
- Bunyan (John). THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. Edited, with an Introduction, by C. H. FIRTH, M.A. With 39 Illustrations by R. ANNING BELL. Cr. 8vo. 6s. See also Library of Devotion and Methuen's Universal Library.
- Burch (G. J.), M.A., F.R.S. A MANUAL OF ELECTRICAL SCIENCE. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s.
- Burgess (Gelett). GOOPS AND HOW TO BE THEM. With numerous Illustrations. Small 4to. 6s.
- Burke (Edmund). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Burn (A. E.), D.D., Prebendary of Lichfield. See Handbooks of Theology.
- Burn (J. H.), B.D. See Library of Devotion.
- Burnand (Sir F. C.). RECORDS AND REMINISCENCES, PERSONAL AND GENERAL. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. Two Volumes. Third Edition. 25s. net.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Burns (Robert), THE POEMS OF. Edited by ANDREW LANG and W. A. CRAIGIE. With Portrait. Third Edition. Demy 8vo, gilt top. 6s.
- Burnside (W. F.), M.A. OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY FOR USE IN SCHOOLS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Burton (Alfred). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Butler (Joseph). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Caldecott (Alfred), D.D. See Handbooks of Theology.
- Calderwood (D. S.), Headmaster of the Normal School, Edinburgh. TEST CARDS IN EUCLID AND ALGEBRA. In three packets of 40, with Answers. 1s. each. Or in three Books, price 2d., 2d., and 3d.
- Cambridge (Ada)[Mrs. Cross]. THIRTY YEARS IN AUSTRALIA. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Canning (George). See Little Library.
- Capey (E. F. H.). See Oxford Biographies.
- Careless (John). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Carlyle (Thomas). THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. Edited by C. R. L. FLETCHER, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Three Volumes. Crown 8vo. 18s.
- THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF OLIVER CROMWELL. With an Introduction by C. H. FIRTH, M.A., and Notes and Appendices by Mrs. S. C. LOMAS. Three Volumes. Demy 8vo. 18s. net.
- Carlyle (R. M. and A. J.), M.A. See Leaders of Religion.
- Chamberlin (Wilbur B.). ORDERED TO CHINA. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Channer (C. C.) and Roberts (M. E.). LACE-MAKING IN THE MIDLANDS, PAST AND PRESENT. With 16 full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Chatterton (Thomas). See Methuen's Universal Library.

- Chesterfield (Lord), THE LETTERS OF, TO HIS SON. Edited, with an Introduction by C. STRACHEY, and Notes by A. CALTHROP. Two Volumes. Cr. 8vo. 12s.
- Christian (F. W.) THE CAROLINE ISLANDS. With many Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
- Cicero. See Classical Translations.
- Clarke (F. A.), M.A. See Leaders of Religion.
- Cleather (A. L.) and Crump (B.), RICHARD WAGNER'S MUSIC DRAMAS: Interpretations, embodying Wagner's own explanations. In Four Volumes. Fcap 8vo. 2s. 6d. each.
- Vol. I.—THE RING OF THE NIBELUNG.
- Vol. II.—PARSIFAL, LOHENGRIN, and THE HOLY GRAIL.
- Clinch (G.) See The Little Guides.
- Clough (W. T.), Head of the Physical Department, East Ham Technical College. See Junior School Books.
- Coast (W. G.), B.A. EXAMINATION PAPERS IN VERGIL. Crown 8vo. 2s.
- Cobb (T.) See Little Blue Books.
- Collingwood (W. G.), M.A. THE LIFE OF JOHN RUSKIN. With Portraits. Second and Cheap Edition. Cr. 8vo. 6s. Also a Popular Edition. Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Collins (W. E.), M.A. See Churchman's Library.
- Colonna. HYPNEROTOMACHIA POLIPHILI UBI HUMANA OMNIA NON NISI SONNIUM ESSE DOCET ATQUE OBITER PLURIMA SCITU SANE QUAM DIGNA COMMEMORAT. An edition limited to 350 copies on handmade paper. Folio. Three Guineas net.
- Combe (William). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Cook (A. M.), M.A. See E. C. Marchant.
- Cooke-Taylor (R. W.) See Social Questions Series.
- Corelli (Marie). THE PASSING OF THE GREAT QUEEN: A Tribute to the Noble Life of Victoria Regina. Small 4to. 1s.
- A CHRISTMAS GREETING. Sm. 4to. 1s.
- Corkran (Alice). See Little Books on Art.
- Cotes (Rosemary). DANTE'S GARDEN. With a Frontispiece. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. cloth 2s. 6d.; leather, 3s. 6d. net.
- BIBLE FLOWERS. With a Frontispiece and Plan. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Cowley (Abraham). See Little Library.
- Cox (J. Charles), LL.D., F.S.A. See Little Guides.
- Cox (Harold), B.A. See Social Questions Series.
- Crabbe (George). See Little Library.
- Craigie (W. A.) A PRIMER OF BURNS. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Craik (Mrs.). See Little Library.
- Crashaw (Richard). See Little Library.
- Crawford (F. G.). See Mary C. Danson.
- Crouch (W.) BRYAN KING. With a Portrait. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Crulkshank (G.) THE LOVING BALLAD OF LORD BATEMAN. With 12 Plates. Crown 16mo. 1s. 6d. net.
- From the edition published by C. Tilt, 1811.
- Crump (B.) See A. L. Cleather.
- Cunliffe (F. H. E.), Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford. THE HISTORY OF THE BOER WAR. With many Illustrations, Plans, and Portraits. In 2 vols. Quarto. 15s. each.
- Cutts (E. L.), D.D. See Leaders of Religion.
- Daniell (G. W.), M.A. See Leaders of Religion.
- Danson (Mary C.) and Crawford (F. G.) FATHERS IN THE FAITH. Small 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Dante. LA COMMEDIA DI DANTE. The Italian Text edited by PAGET TOYNBEE, M.A., D.Litt. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Paget Toynbee, Little Library, and Methuen's Universal Library.
- Darley (George). See Little Library.
- Davenport (Cyril). See Connoisseur's Library and Little Books on Art.
- Dawson (A. J.) MOROCCO. Being a bundle of jottings, notes, impressions, tales, and tributes. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Deane (A. C.). See Little Library.
- Delbos (Leon). THE METRIC SYSTEM. Crown 8vo. 2s.
- Demosthenes: THE OLYNTHIACS AND PHILIPPICS. Translated upon a new principle by OTHO HOLLAND Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

- Demosthenes. AGAINST CONON AND CALICLES. Edited with Notes and Vocabulary, by F. DARWIN SWIFT, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 2s.
- Dickens (Charles). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Dickinson (Emily). POEMS. First Series. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.
- Dickinson (G. L.), M.A., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. THE GREEK VIEW OF LIFE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Dickson (H. N.), F.R.S.E., F.R.Met. Soc. METEOROLOGY. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Dilke (Lady). See Social Questions Series.
- Dillon (Edward). See Connoisseur's Library.
- Ditchfield (P. H.), M.A., F.S.A. ENGLISH VILLAGES. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- THE STORY OF OUR ENGLISH TOWNS. With an Introduction by AUGUSTUS JESSOPP, D.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- OLD ENGLISH CUSTOMS: Extant at the Present Time. An Account of Local Observances, Festival Customs, and Ancient Ceremonies yet Surviving in Great Britain. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Dixon (W. M.), M.A. A PRIMER OF TENNYSON. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- ENGLISH POETRY FROM BLAKE TO BROWNING. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Dole N. H. FAMOUS COMPOSERS. With Portraits. Two Volumes. Demy 8vo. 12s. net.
- Dowden (J.), D.D., Lord Bishop of Edinburgh. See Churchman's Library.
- Drage (G.) See Books on Business.
- Driver (S. R.), D.D., Canon of Christ Church, Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. SERMONS ON SUBJECTS CONNECTED WITH THE OLD TESTAMENT. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Westminster Commentaries.
- Dryhurst (A. R.). See Little Books on Art.
- Duguid (Charles), City Editor of the Morning Post, Author of the 'Story of the Stock Exchange,' etc. See Books on Business.
- Duncan (S. J.) (Mrs. COTES), Author of 'A Voyage of Consolation.' ON THE OTHER SIDE OF THE LATCH. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Dunn (J. T.), D.Sc., and Mundella (V. A.). GENERAL ELEMENTARY SCIENCE. With 114 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Dunstan (A. E.), B.Sc., Head of the Chemical Department, East Ham Technical College. See Junior School Books.
- *Durham (The Earl of). A REPORT ON CANADA. With an Introductory Note. Demy 8vo. 4s. 6d. net.
- Dutt (W. A.). A POPULAR GUIDE TO NORFOLK. Medium 8vo. 6d. net.
- THE NORFOLK BROADS. With coloured and other Illustrations by FRANK SOUTHGATE. Large Demy 8vo. 21s. net. See also The Little Guides.
- Earle (John), Bishop of Salisbury. MICROCOSMOGRAPHIE, OR A PIECE OF THE WORLD DISCOVERED; IN ESSAYS AND CHARACTERS. Post 16mo. 2s net. Reprinted from the Sixth Edition published by Robert Allot in 1633.
- Edwards (Clement). See Social Questions Series.
- Edwards (W. Douglas). See Commercial Series.
- *Edwards (M. E. Betham), HOME LIFE IN FRANCE. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Egan (Pierce). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Egerton (H. E.), M.A. A HISTORY OF BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Ellaby (C. G.), See The Little Guides.
- Ellerton (F. G.), See S. J. Stone.
- Ellwood (Thomas), THE HISTORY OF THE LIFE OF. Edited by C. G. CRUMP, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Engel (E.), A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE: From its Beginning to Tennyson. Translated from the German. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Fairbrother (W. H.), M.A. THE PHILOSOPHY OF T. H. GREEN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- FELISSA; OR, THE LIFE AND OPINIONS OF A KITTEN OF SENTIMENT. With 12 Coloured Plates. Post 16mo. 2s. 6d. net. (51×33). From the edition published by J. Harris, 1811.

- Farrer (Reginald). THE GARDEN OF ASIA. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s. A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Ferrier (Susan). See Little Library.
- Fidler (T. Claxton), M. Inst. C.E., Professor of Engineering, University College, Dundee, in the University of St. Andrews. See Books on Business.
- Fielding (Henry). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Finn (S. W.), M.A. See Junior Examination Series.
- Firth (C. H.), M.A. CRÖMVELL'S ARMY: A History of the English Soldier during the Civil Wars, the Commonwealth, and the Protectorate. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Fisher (G. W.), M.A. ANNALS OF SHREWSBURY SCHOOL. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- FitzGerald (Edward). THE RUB'AIYÁT OF OMAR KHAYYÁM. Printed from the Fifth and last Edition. With a Commentary by Mrs. STEPHEN BATSON, and a Biography of Omar by E. D. Ross. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Miniature Library.
- Flecker (W. H.), M.A., D.C.L., Headmaster of the Dean Close School, Cheltenham. THE STUDENT'S PRAYER BOOK. Part I. MORNING AND EVENING PRAVER AND LITANY. With an Introduction and Notes. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Flux (A. W.), M.A., William Dow Professor of Political Economy in M'Gill University, Montreal: sometime Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and formerly Stanley-Jevons Professor of Political Economy in the Owens Coll., Manchester. ECONOMIC PRINCIPLES. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Fortescue (Mrs. G.) See Little Books on Art.
- Fraser (David). A MODERN CAMPAIGN; OR, WAR AND WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY IN THE FAR EAST. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Fraser (J. F.). ROUND THE WORLD ON A WHEEL. With 100 Illustrations. Third Edition Crown 8vo. 6s. A Colonial Edition is also published.
- French (W.). See Textbooks of Technology.
- Freudenreich (Ed. von). DAIRY BACTERIOLOGY. A Short Manual for the Use of Students. Translated by J. R. AINSWORTH DAVIS, M.A. Second Edition. Revised. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Fulford (H. W.), M.A. See Churchman's Bible.
- C. G., and F. C. G. JOHN BULL'S ADVENTURES IN THE FISCAL WONDER-LAND. By CHARLES GEAKE. With 46 Illustrations by F. CARRUTHERS GOULD. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Gallichan (W. M.). See The Little Guides.
- Gambado (Geoffrey, Esq.). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Gaskell (Mrs.). See Little Library.
- Gasquet, the Right Rev. Abbot, O.S.B. See Antiquary's Books.
- George (H. B.), M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. BATTLES OF ENGLISH HISTORY. With numerous Plans. Fourth Edition. Revised, with a new Chapter including the South African War. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Gibbins (H. de B.), Litt.D., M.A. INDUSTRY IN ENGLAND: HISTORICAL OUTLINES. With 5 Maps. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- A COMPANION GERMAN GRAMMAR. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- THE INDUSTRIAL HISTORY OF ENGLAND. Tenth Edition. Revised. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo. 3s.
- ENGLISH SOCIAL REFORMERS. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. See also Commercial Series and Social Questions Series.
- Gibbon (Edward). THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE. A New Edition, edited with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Litt.D., Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge. In Seven Volumes. Demy 8vo. Gilt top, 8s. 6d. each. Also, Crown 8vo. 6s. each.
- MEMOIRS OF MY LIFE AND WRITINGS. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by C. BIRKBECK HILL, LL.D. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- See also Methuen's Universal Library.
- Gibson (E. C. S.), D.D., Vicar of Leeds. See Westminister Commentaries, Handbooks of Theology, and Oxford Biographies.
- Gilbert (A. R.). See Little Books on Art.
- Godfrey (Elizabeth). A BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Godley (A. D.), M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. LYRA FRIVOLA. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- VERSES TO ORDER. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- SECOND STRINGS. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

- Goldsmith (Oliver). THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. With 24 Coloured Plates by T. ROWLANDSON. Royal 8vo. One Guinea net.
- Reprinted from the edition of 1817. Also Fcap. 32mo. With 10 Plates in Photogravure by Tony Johannot. Leather, 2s. 6d. net. See also Illustrated Pocket Library and Methuen's Universal Library.
- Goudge (H. L.), M.A. Principal of Wells Theological College. See Westminster Commentaries.
- Graham (P. Anderson). See Social Questions Series.
- Granger (F. S.), M.A. Litt.D. PSYCHOLOGY. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- THE SOUL OF A CHRISTIAN. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Gray (E. M'Queen). GERMAN PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Gray (P. L.), B.Sc. formerly Lecturer in Physics in Mason University College, Birmingham. THE PRINCIPLES OF MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY: an Elementary Text-Book. With 181 Diagrams. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Green (G. Buckland), M.A. Assistant Master at Edinburgh Academy, late Fellow of St. John's College, Oxon. NOTES ON GREEK AND LATIN SYNTAX. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Green (E. T.), M.A. See Churchman's Library.
- Greenidge (A. H. J.), M.A. A HISTORY OF ROME: During the Later Republic and the Early Principate. In Six Volumes. Demy 8vo. Vol. I. (133-104 B.C.). 10s. 6d. net.
- Greenwell (Dora). See Miniature Library.
- Gregory (R. A.). THE VAULT OF HEAVEN. A Popular Introduction to Astronomy. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Gregory (Miss E. C.). See Library of Devotion.
- Greville Minor. A MODERN JOURNAL. Edited by J. A. SPENDER. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Grinling (C. H.). A HISTORY OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, 1845-95. With Illustrations. Revised, with an additional chapter. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Grubb (H. C.). See Textbooks of Technology.
- Guiney (Louisa L.). HURRELL FROUDE: Memoranda and Comments. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Gwynn (M. L.). A BIRTHDAY BOOK. Royal 8vo. 12s.
- Hackett (John), B.D. A HISTORY OF THE ORTHODOX CHURCH OF CYPRUS. With Maps and Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 15s. net.
- Haddon (A. C.), Sc.D., F.R.S. HEAD-HUNTERS, BLACK, WHITE, AND BROWN. With many Illustrations and a Map. Demy 8vo. 15s.
- Hadfield (R. A.). See Social Questions Series.
- Hall (R. N.) and Neal (W. G.). THE ANCIENT RUINS OF RHODESIA. With numerous Illustrations. Second Edition, revised. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Hall (R. N.). GREAT ZIMBABWE. With numerous Plans and Illustrations. Royal 8vo. 21s. net.
- Hamilton (F. J.), D.D. See Byzantine Texts.
- Hammond (J. L.). CHARLES JAMES FOX: A Biographical Study. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Hannay (D.). A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ROYAL NAVY, FROM EARLY TIMES TO THE PRESENT DAY. Illustrated. Two Volumes. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. each. Vol. I. 1200-1688.
- Hannay (James O.), M.A. THE SPIRIT AND ORIGIN OF CHRISTIAN MONASTICISM. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE WISDOM OF THE DESERT. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Hare, (A. T.), M.A. THE CONSTRUCTION OF LARGE INDUCTION COILS. With numerous Diagrams. Demy 8vo. 6s.
- Harrison (Clifford). READING AND READERS. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Hawthorne (Nathaniel). See Little Library.
- HEALTH, WEALTH AND WISDOM. Crown 8vo. 1s. net.
- Heath (Frank R.). See The Little Guides.
- Heath (Dudley). See Connoisseur's Library.
- Hello (Ernest). STUDIES IN SAINTSHIP. Translated from the French by V. M. CRAWFORD. Fcap 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Henderson (B. W.), Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford. THE LIFE AND PRINCIPAL OF THE EMPEROR NERO. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Henderson (T. F.). See Little Library and Oxford Biographies.
- Henley (W. E.). ENGLISH LYRICS. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Henley (W. E.) and Whibley (C.). A BOOK OF ENGLISH PROSE. Crown 8vo. Buckram, gilt top. 6s.
- Henson (H. H.), B.D. Canon of Westminster. APOSTOLIC CHRISTIANITY: As Illustrated by the Epistles of St. Paul to the Corinthians. Crown 8vo. 6s.

- LIGHT AND LEAVEN: HISTORICAL AND SOCIAL SERMONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 DISCIPLINE AND LAW. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Herbert (George). See Library of Devotion.
- Herbert of Cherbury (Lord). See Miniature Library.
- Hewins (W. A. S.), B.A. ENGLISH TRADE AND FINANCE IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Heywood (W.). PALIO AND PONTE: A Book of Tuscan Games. Illustrated. Royal 8vo. 21s. net.
- Hilbert (T.). See Little Blue Books.
- Hill (Clare), Registered Teacher to the City and Guilds of London Institute. See Textbooks of Technology.
- Hill (Henry), B.A. Headmaster of the Boy's High School, Worcester, Cape Colony. A SOUTH AFRICAN ARITHMETIC. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
 This book has been specially written for use in South African schools.
- Hillegas (Howard C.). WITH THE BOER FORCES. With 24 Illustrations. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Hobhouse (Emily). THE BRUNT OF THE WAR. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Hobhouse (L. T.), Fellow of C.C.C., Oxford. THE THEORY OF KNOWLEDGE. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Hobson (J. A.), M.A. INTERNATIONAL TRADE: A Study of Economic Principles. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net. See also Social Questions Series.
- Hodgkin (T.), D.C.L. See Leaders of Religion.
- Hogg (Thomas Jefferson). SHELLEY AT OXFORD. With an Introduction by R. A. STREATFIELD. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. net.
- Holden-Stone (G. de). See Books on Business.
- Holdich (Sir T. H.), K.C.I.E. THE INDIAN BORDERLAND: being a Personal Record of Twenty Years. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Holdsworth (W. S.), M.A. A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LAW. In Two Volumes. Vol. I. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Holyoake (G. J.). See Social Questions Series.
- Hoppner. See Little Galleries.
- Horace. See Classical Translations.
- Horsburgh (E. L. S.), M.A. WATERLOO: A Narrative and Criticism. With Plans. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s. See also Oxford Biographies.
- Horth (A. C.), Master of Art and Manual Training Departments, Roan School, Greenwich. See Textbooks of Technology.
- Horton (R. F.), D.D. See Leaders of Religion.
- Hosie (Alexander). MANCHURIA. With Illustrations and a Map. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- How (F. D.). SIX GREAT SCHOOLMASTERS. With Portraits and Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Howell (G.). See Social Questions Series.
- Hudson (Robert). MEMORIALS OF A WARWICKSHIRE VILLAGE. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 15s. net.
- Hughes (C. E.). THE PRAISE OF SHAKESPEARE. An English Anthology. With a Preface by SIDNEY LEE. Demy 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Hughes (Thomas). TOM BROWN'S SCHOOL DAYS. With an Introduction and Notes by VERNON RANDALL. Leather. Royal 32mo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Hutchinson (Horace G.). THE NEW FOREST. Described by. Illustrated in colour with 50 Pictures by WALTER TYNDALE and 4 by Miss LUCY KEMP WELCH. Large Demy 8vo. 21s. net.
- Hutton (A. W.), M.A. See Leaders of Religion.
- Hutton (R. H.). See Leaders of Religion.
- Hutton (W. H.), M.A. THE LIFE OF SIR THOMAS MORE. With Portraits. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 5s. See also Leaders of Religion.
- Hyett (F. A.). A SHORT HISTORY OF FLORENCE. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Ibsen (Henrik). BRAND. A Drama. Translated by WILLIAM WILSON. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Inge (W. R.), M.A. FELLOW AND TUTOR OF HERTFORD COLLEGE, OXFORD. CHRISTIAN MYSTICISM. The Bampton Lectures for 1899. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net. See also Library of Devotion.
- Innes (A. D.), M.A. A HISTORY OF THE BRITISH IN INDIA. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo. 6s.

- Jackson (S.), M.A. See Commercial Series.
- Jackson (F. Hamilton). See The Little Guides.
- Jacob (F.), M.A. See Junior Examination Series.
- Jeans (J. Stephen). See Social Questions Series.
- Jeffreys (D. Gwyn). DOLLY'S THEATRICALS. Described and Illustrated with 24 Coloured Pictures. Super Royal 16mo. 2s. 6d.
- Jenks (E.), M.A. Reader of Law in the University of Oxford. ENGLISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Jessopp (Augustus), D.D. See Leaders of Religion.
- Devons (F. B.), M.A., Litt.D. Principal of Hatfield Hall, Durham. See Churchman's Library and Handbooks of Theology.
- Johnson (Mrs. Barham). WILLIAM BODHAM DONNE AND HIS FRIENDS. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Johnston (Sir H. H.), K.C.E. BRITISH CENTRAL AFRICA. With nearly 200 Illustrations and Six Maps. Second Edition. Crown 4to. 18s. net.
- Jones (H.). See Commercial Series.
- Jones (L. A. Atherley), K.C. M.P., and Bellot (Hugh H. L.). THE MINERS' GUIDE TO THE COAL MINES' REGULATION ACTS. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Jonson (Ben). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Julian (Lady) of Norwich. REVELATIONS OF DIVINE LOVE. Edited by GRACE WARRACK. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Juvenal. See Classical Translations.
- Kaufmann (M.). See Social Questions Series.
- Keating (J. F.), D.D. THE AGAPE AND THE EUCHARIST. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Keats (John). THE POEMS OF. Edited with Introduction and Notes by E. de Selincourt, M.A. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net. See also Little Library and Methuen's Universal Library.
- Keble (John). THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. With an Introduction and Notes by W. Lock, D.D., Warden of Keble College. Illustrated by R. ANNING BELL. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.; padded morocco, 5s. See also Library of Devotion.
- Kempis (Thomas A.). THE IMITATION OF CHRIST. With an Introduction by DEAN FARRAK. Illustrated by C. M. GERE. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.; padded morocco, 5s. See also Library of Devotion and Methuen's Universal Library.
- Also Translated by C. BIGG, D.D. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Kennedy (James Houghton), D.D. Assistant Lecturer in Divinity in the University of Dublin. ST. PAUL'S SECOND AND THIRD EPISTLES TO THE CORINTHIANS. With Introduction, Dissertations and Notes. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Kestell (J. D.). THROUGH SHOT AND FLAME: Being the Adventures and Experiences of J. D. KESTELL, Chaplain to General Christian de Wet. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Kimmins (C. W.), M.A. THE CHEMISTRY OF LIFE AND HEALTH. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Kinglake (A. W.). See Little Library.
- Kipling (Rudyard). BARRACK-ROOM BALLADS. 73rd Thousand. Cr. 8vo. Twentieth Edition. 6s.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- THE SEVEN SEAS. 62nd Thousand. Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- THE FIVE NATIONS. 1st Thousand. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- DEPARTMENTAL DITTIES. Sixteenth Edition. Crown 8vo. Buckram. 6s.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Knowling (R. J.), M.A. Professor of New Testament Exegesis at King's College, London. See Westminster Commentaries.
- Lamb (Charles and Mary). THE WORKS OF. Edited by E. V. LUCAS. With Numerous Illustrations. In Seven Volumes. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. each.
- THE ESSAYS OF ELIA. With over 100 Illustrations by A. GARTH JONES, and an Introduction by E. V. LUCAS. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- THE KING AND QUEEN OF HEARTS: An 1805 Book for Children. Illustrated by WILLIAM MULREADY. A new edition, in facsimile, edited by E. V. LUCAS. 1s. 6d.
- See also Little Library.
- Lambert (F. A. H.). See The Little Guides.
- Lambros (Professor). See Byzantine Texts.
- Lane-Poole (Stanley). A HISTORY OF EGYPT IN THE MIDDLE AGES. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.

- Langbridge (F.) M.A. BALLADS OF THE BRAVE: Poems of Chivalry, Enterprise, Courage, and Constancy. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Law (William). See Library of Devotion.
- Leach (Henry). THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE. A Biography. With 12 Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- *Lee (Captain L. Melville). A HISTORY OF POLICE IN ENGLAND. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Leigh (Percival). THE COMIC ENGLISH GRAMMAR. Embellished with upwards of 50 characteristic Illustrations by JOHN LEECH. Post 16mo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Lewes (V.B.), M.A. AIR AND WATER. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Lisle (Fortunée de). See Little Books on Art.
- Littlehales (H.). See Antiquary's Books.
- Lock (Walter), D.D. Warden of Keble College. ST. PAUL, THE MASTER-BUILDER. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. See also Leaders of Religion.
- Locke (John). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Locker (F.). See Little Library.
- Longfellow (H. W.). See Little Library.
- Lorimer (George Horace). LETTERS FROM A SELF-MADE MERCHANT TO HIS SON. Twelfth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- OLD GORGON GRAHAM. Crown 8vo. 6s.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Lover (Samuel). See Illustrated Pocket Library
- E. V. L. and C. L. G. ENGLAND DAY BY DAY: OR, THE ENGLISHMAN'S HANDBOOK TO EFFICIENCY. Illustrated by GEORGE MORROW. Fourth Edition. Fcap. 4to. 1s. net.
A burlesque Year-Book and Almanac.
- Lucas (E. V.). THE LIFE OF CHARLES LAMB. With numerous Portraits and Illustrations. Two Vols. Demy 8vo. 21s. net.
- Lucian. See Classical Translations.
- Lyde (L. W.), M.A. See Commercial Series.
- Lydon (Noel S.). See Junior School Books.
- Lyttelton (Hon. Mrs. A.). WOMEN AND THEIR WORK. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- M. M. HOW TO DRESS AND WHAT TO WEAR. Crown 8vo. 1s. net.
- Macaulay (Lord). CRITICAL AND HISTORICAL ESSAYS. Edited by F. C. MONTAGUE, M.A. Three Volumes. Crown 8vo. 18s.
The only edition of this book completely annotated.
- M'Allen (J. E. B.), M.A. See Commercial Series.
- MacCulloch (J. A.). See Churchman's Library.
- MacCunn (F.). See Leaders of Religion.
- McDermott, (E. R.), Editor of the Railway News, City Editor of the Daily News. See Books on Business.
- M'Dowall (A. S.). See Oxford Biographies.
- Mackay (A. M.). See Churchman's Library.
- Magnus (Laurie), M.A. A PRIMER OF WORDSWORTH. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Mahaffy (J. P.), Litt.D. A HISTORY OF THE EGYPT OF THE PTOLEMIES. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Maitland (F. W.), LL.D. Downing Professor of the Laws of England in the University of Cambridge. CANON LAW IN ENGLAND. Royal 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Malden (H. E.), M.A. ENGLISH RECORDS. A Companion to the History of England. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- THE ENGLISH CITIZEN: HIS RIGHTS AND DUTIES. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Marchant (E. C.), M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. A GREEK ANTHOLOGY. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Marchant (E. C.), M.A., and Cook (A. M.), M.A. PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Marlowe (Christopher). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Marr (J. E.), F.R.S. Fellow of St John's College, Cambridge. THE SCIENTIFIC STUDY OF SCENERY. Second Edition. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- AGRICULTURAL GEOLOGY. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Marvell (Andrew). See Little Library.
- Maskell (A.) See Connoisseur's Library.
- Mason (A. J.), D.D. See Leaders of Religion.
- Massee (George). THE EVOLUTION OF PLANT LIFE: LOWER FORMS. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

- Masterman (C. F. G.), M.A. TENNYSON AS A RELIGIOUS TEACHER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
May (Phil). THE PHIL MAY ALBUM. Second Edition. 4to. 1s. net.
Mellows (Emma S.). A SHORT STORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. Crown 8vo.
 3s. 6d.
- Michell (E. B.). THE ART AND PRACTICE OF HAWKING. With 3 Photogravures by G. E. LODGE, and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- *Millais (J. G.). THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS,
 President of the Royal Academy. With 319 Illustrations, of which 9 are in Photogravure.
New Edition. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Millais (Sir John Everett). See Little Galleries.
- Millis (C. T.), M.I.M.E. Principal of the Borough Polytechnic College. See Textbooks of Technology.
- Milne (J. G.), M.A. A HISTORY OF ROMAN EGYPT. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
Milton, John, THE POEMS OF, BOTH ENGLISH AND LATIN, Compos'd at several times. Printed by his true Copies.
 The Songs were set in Musick by Mr. HENRY LAWES, Gentleman of the Kings Chappel, and one of His Majesties Private Musick.
 Printed and publish'd according to Order.
 Printed by RUTH RAWORTH for HUMPHREY MOSELEY, and are to be sold at the signe of the Princes Armes in Pauls Churhyard, 1645.
 See also Little Library and Methuen's Universal Library.
- Minchin (H. C.), M.A. See Little Galleries.
- Mitchell (P. Chalmers), M.A. OUTLINES OF BIOLOGY. Illustrated. Second Edition.
Crown 8vo. 6s.
 A text-book designed to cover the Schedule issued by the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons.
- 'Moil (A.).' See Books on Business.
- Moir (D. M.). See Little Library.
- Moore (H. E.). See Social Questions Series.
- Moran (Clarence G.). See Books on Business.
- More (Sir Thomas). See Methuen's Universal Library.
- Morfall (W. R.), Oriel College, Oxford. A HISTORY OF RUSSIA FROM PETER
 THE GREAT TO ALEXANDER II. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Morich (R. J.), late of Clifton College. See School Examination Series.
- Morris (J. E.). See The Little Guides.
- Morton (Miss Anderson). See Miss Brodrick.
- Moule (H. C. G.), D.D. Lord Bishop of Durham. See Leaders of Religion.
- Muir (M. M. Pattison), M.A. THE CHEMISTRY OF FIRE. The Elementary Principles of Chemistry. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Mundella (V. A.), M.A. See J. T. Dunn.
- Munro (R.), LL.D. See The Antiquary's Books.
- Naval Officer (A). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Neal (W. G.). See R. N. Hall.
- Newman (J. H.) and others. See Library of Devotion.
- Nichols (J. B. B.). See Little Library.
- Nicklin (T.), M. A. EXAMINATION PAPERS IN THUCYDIDES. Crown 8vo. 2s.
- Nimrod. See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Northcote (James), R.A. THE CONVERSATIONS OF JAMES NORTHCOTE, R.A., AND JAMES WARD. Edited by ERNEST FLETCHER. With many Portraits.
Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- *Norway (A. H.), Author of 'Highways and Byways in Devon and Cornwall.' NAPLES.
 With 24 Coloured Illustrations by MAURICE GREIFFENHAGEN. A New Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Novalis. THE DISCIPLES AT SAIS AND OTHER FRAGMENTS. Edited by Miss UNA BIRCH. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Oliphant (Mrs.). See Leaders of Religion.
- Oman (C. W. C.), M.A. Fellow of All Souls', Oxford. A HISTORY OF THE ART OF WAR. Vol. II.: The Middle Ages, from the Fourth to the Fourteenth Century. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Ottley (R. L.), D.D. Professor of Pastoral Theology at Oxford and Canon of Christ Church.
 See Handbooks of Theology and Leaders of Religion.
- Owen (Douglas), Barrister-at-Law, Secretary to the Alliance Marine and General Assurance Company. See Books on Business.
- Oxford (M. N.), of Guy's Hospital. A HANDBOOK OF NURSING. Second Edition.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

- Pakes (W. C. C.). THE SCIENCE OF HYGIENE. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 15s.
- Palmer (Frederick). WITH KUROKI IN MANCHURIA. With many Illustrations. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Parker (Gilbert). A LOVER'S DIARY: SONGS IN SEQUENCE. Fcap. 8vo. 5s.
- Parkinson (John). PARADISI IN SOLE PARADISUS TERRISTRIS, OR A GARDEN OF ALL SORTS OF PLEASANT FLOWERS. Folio. £5. 5s. net.
Also an Edition of 20 copies on Japanese vellum. Ten Guineas net.
- Parmenter (John). HELIO-TROPS, OR NEW POSIES FOR SUNDIALS, 1625. Edited by PERCIVAL LANDON. Quarto. 3s. 6d. net.
- parmentier (Prof. Léon). See Byzantine Texts.
- Pascal. See Library of Devotion.
- Paston (George). SOCIAL CARICATURES OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. Imperial Quarto. £2. 12s. 6d. net. See also Little Books on Art and Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Paterson (W. R.) (Benjamin Swift). LIFE'S QUESTIONINGS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Patterson (A. H.). NOTES OF AN EAST COAST NATURALIST. Illustrated in Colour by F. SOUTHGATE. Second Edition. Cr. 8vo. 6s.
- Peacock (N.). See Little Books on Art.
- Pearce (E. H.), M.A. ANNALS OF CHRIST'S HOSPITAL. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Peary (R. E.), Gold Medallist of the Royal Geographical Society. NORTHWARD OVER THE GREAT ICE. With over 800 Illustrations. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 32s. net.
- Peel (Sidney), late Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford, and Secretary to the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws. PRACTICAL LICENSING REFORM. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- Peters (J. P.), D.D. See Churchman's Library.
- Petrie (W. M. Flinders), D.C.L., LL.D., Professor of Egyptology at University College. A HISTORY OF EGYPT, FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE PRESENT DAY. Fully Illustrated. In six volumes. Crown 8vo. 6s. each.
- VOL. I. PREHISTORIC TIMES TO XVITH DYNASTY. Fifth Edition.
- VOL. II. THE XVIIth AND XVIIIth DYNASTIES. Fourth Edition.
- VOL. III. XIXth TO XXXth DYNASTIES.
- VOL. IV. THE EGYPT OF THE PTOLEMIES. J. P. MAHAFFY, Litt.D.
- VOL. V. ROMAN EGYPT. J. G. MILNE, M.A.
- VOL. VI. EGYPT IN THE MIDDLE AGES. STANLEY LANE-POOLE, M.A.
- RELIGION AND CONSCIENCE IN ANCIENT EGYPT. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- SYRIA AND EGYPT, FROM THE TELL EL AMARNA TABLETS. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- EGYPTIAN TALES. Illustrated by TRISTRAM ELLIS. In Two Volumes. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.
- EGYPTIAN DECORATIVE ART. With 120 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Phillips (W. A.). See Oxford Biographies.
- Phillpotts (Eden). MY DEVON YEAR. With 38 Illustrations by J. LEY PETHYBRIDGE. Second and Cheaper Edition. Large Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Pienaar (Philip). WITH STEYN AND DE WET. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Plautus. THE CAPITIVI. Edited, with an Introduction, Textual Notes, and a Commentary, by W. M. LINDSAY, Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Plowden-Wardlaw (J. T.), B.A., King's Coll. Camb. See School Examination Series.
- Pocock (Roger). A FRONTIERSMAN. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Podmore (Frank). MODERN SPIRITUALISM. Two Volumes. Demy 8vo. 21s. net.
A History and a Criticism.
- Poer (J. Patrick Le.). A MODERN LEGIONARY. Crown 8vo. 6s.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Pollard (Alice). See Little Books on Art.
- Pollard (A. W.). OLD PICTURE BOOKS. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Pollard (Eliza F.). See Little Books on Art.
- Pollock (David), M.I.N.A., Author of 'Modern Shipbuilding and the Men engaged in it, etc., etc.' See Books on Business.
- Potter (M. C.), M.A., F.L.S. A TEXT-BOOK OF AGRICULTURAL BOTANY. Illustrated. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

- Potter Boy (An Old). WHEN I WAS A CHILD. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Pradeau (G.). A KEY TO THE TIME ALLUSIONS IN THE DIVINE COMEDY. With a Dial. Small quarto. 3s. 6d.
- Prance (G.). See R. Wyon.
- Prescott (O. L.). ABOUT MUSIC, AND WHAT IT IS MADE OF. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- Price (L. L.), M.A. Fellow of Oriel College, Oxon. A HISTORY OF ENGLISH POLITICAL ECONOMY. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Primrose (Deborah). A MODERN BEOTIA. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- PROTECTION AND INDUSTRY. By various Writers. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.
- Pugin and Rowlandson. THE MICROCOSM OF LONDON, OR LONDON IN MINIATURE. With 104 Illustrations in colour. In Three Volumes. Small 4to. £3, 3s. net.
- **Q' (A. T. Quiller Couch). THE GOLDEN POMP. A Procession of English Lyrics. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Quevedo Villegas. See Miniature Library.
- G.R. and E. S. THE WOODHOUSE CORRESPONDENCE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Rackham (R. B.), M.A. See Westminster Commentaries.
- Randolph (B. W.), D.D. Principal of the Theological College, Ely. See Library of Devotion.
- Rannie (D. W.), M.A. A STUDENT'S HISTORY OF SCOTLAND. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Rashdall (Hastings), M.A. Fellow and Tutor of New College, Oxford. DOCTRINE AND DEVELOPMENT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Rawstorne (Lawrence, Esq.). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- A Real Paddy. See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Reason (W.), M.A. See Social Questions Series.
- Redfern (W. B.), Author of 'Ancient Wood and Iron Work in Cambridge,' etc. ROYAL AND HISTORIC GLOVES AND ANCIENT SHOES. Profusely Illustrated in colour and half-tone. Quarto. £2, 2s. net.
- Reynolds. See Little Galleries.
- Roberts (M. E.). See C. C. Channer.
- Robertson, (A.), D.D. Lord Bishop of Exeter. REGNUM DEI. The Bampton Lectures of 1901. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
- Robertson (C. Grant), M.A. Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, Examiner in the Honour School of Modern History, Oxford, 1901-1904. SELECT STATUTES, CASES, AND CONSTITUTIONAL DOCUMENTS, 1660-1832. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- *Robertson (Sir G. S.) K.C.S.I. CHITRAL: The Story of a Minor Siege. With numerous Illustrations, Map and Plans. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Robinson (A. W.), M.A. See Churchman's Bible.
- Robinson (Cecilia). THE MINISTRY OF DEACONNESSES. With an Introduction by the late Archbishop of Canterbury. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Rochefoucauld (La). See Little Library.
- Rodwell (G.), B.A. NEW TESTAMENT GREEK. A Course for Beginners. With a Preface by WALTER LOCK, D.D., Warden of Keble College. Fcap. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Roe (Fred). ANCIENT COFFERS AND CUPBOARDS: Their History and Description. With many Illustrations. Quarto. £3, 3s. net.
- Rogers (A. G. L.), M.A. Editor of the last volume of 'The History of Agriculture and Prices in England.' See Books on Business.
- Romney. See Little Galleries.
- Roscoe (E. S.). ROBERT HARLEY, EARL OF OXFORD. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. This is the only life of Harley in existence.
See also The Little Guides.
- Rose (Edward). THE ROSE READER. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. Also in 4 Parts. Parts I. and II. 6d. each; Part III. 8d.; Part IV. 10d.
- Rubie (A. E.), D.D. Head Master of College, Eltham. See Junior School Books.
- Russell (W. Clark). THE LIFE OF ADMIRAL LORD COLLINGWOOD. With Illustrations by F. BRANGWYN. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
A Colonial Edition is also published.
- St. Anselm. See Library of Devotion.
- St. Augustine. See Library of Devotion.
- 'Saki' (H. Munro). REGINALD. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Sales (St. Francis de). See Library of Devotion.
- Salmon (A. L.). A POPULAR GUIDE TO DEVON. Medium 8vo. 6d. net. See also The Little Guides.
- Sargeaunt (J.), M.A. ANNALS OF WESTMINSTER SCHOOL. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Sathas (C.). See Byzantine Texts.

- Schmitt (John). See Byzantine Texts.
- *Scott, (A. M.) WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL. With Portraits and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Seeley (H. G.) F.R.S. DRAGONS OF THE AIR. With many Illustrations. Cr. 8vo. 6s.
- *Selincourt (E. de), M.A. THE POEMS OF JOHN KEATS. With an Introduction and Notes, and a Portrait in Photogravure. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Sells (V. P.), M.A. THE MECHANICS OF DAILY LIFE. Illustrated. Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Selous (Edmund). TOMMY SMITH'S ANIMALS. Illustrated by G. W. ORD. Third Edition. Feap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Settle (J. H.). ANECDOTES OF SOLDIERS. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. net.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Shakespeare (William).
- THE FOUR FOLIOS, 1623; 1632; 1664; 1685. Each Four Guineas net, or a complete set, Twelve Guineas net.
- The Arden Shakespeare.
- Demy 8vo.* 2s. 6d. net each volume. General Editor, W. J. CRAIG. An Edition of Shakespeare in single Plays. Edited with a full Introduction, Textual Notes, and a Commentary at the foot of the page.
- HAMLET. Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN, Litt.D.
- ROMEO AND JULIET. Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN, Litt.D.
- KING LEAR. Edited by W. J. CRAIG.
- JULIUS CAESAR. Edited by M. MACMILLAN, M.A.
- THE TEMPEST. Edited by MORETON LUCE.
- OTHELLO. Edited by H. C. HART.
- TITUS ANDRONICUS. Edited by H. B. BALDON.
- CYMBELINE. Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN.
- THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR. Edited by H. C. HART.
- A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. Edited by H. CUNNINGHAM.
- KING HENRY V. Edited by H. A. EVANS.
- ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. Edited by W. O. BRIGSTOCKE.
- THE TAMING OF THE SHREW. Edited by R. WARWICK BOND.
- TIMON OF ATHENS. Edited by K. DEIGHTON.
- The Little Quarto Shakespeare. Edited by W. J. CRAIG. With Introductions and Notes. Pott 16mo. In 40 Volumes. Leather, price 1s. net each volume.
- See also Methuen's Universal Library.
- Sharp (A.). VICTORIAN POETS. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Sharp (Mrs. E. A.). See Little Books on Art.
- Shedlock (J. S.). THE PIANOFORTE SONATA: Its Origin and Development. Crown 8vo. 5s.
- Shelley (Percy B.). ADONAI: an Elegy on the death of John Keats, Author of 'Endymion,' etc. Pisa. From the types of Didot, 1821. 2s. net.
- See also Methuen's Universal Library.
- Sherwell (Arthur), M.A. See Social Questions Series.
- *Shipley (Mary E.). AN ENGLISH CHURCH HISTORY FOR CHILDREN. With a Preface by the Bishop of Gibraltar, late Professor of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, London. With Maps and Illustrations. Part I. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.
- Sichel (Walter). DISRAELI: A Study in Personality and Ideas. With 3 Portraits. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
- A Colonial Edition is also published.
- See also Oxford Biographies.
- Sime (J.). See Little Books on Art.
- Simonson (G. A.). FRANCESCO GUARDI. With 41 Plates. Royal folio. £2, 2s. net.
- Sketchley (R. E. D.). See Little Books on Art.
- Skipton (H. P. K.). See Little Books on Art.
- Sladen (Douglas). SICILY. With over 200 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 5s. net.
- Small (Evans), M.A. THE EARTH. An Introduction to Physiography. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
- Smallwood, (M. G.). See Little Books on Art.
- Smedley (F. E.). See Illustrated Pocket Library.
- Smith (Adam). THE WEALTH OF NATIONS. Edited with an Introduction and numerous Notes by EDWIN CANNAN, M.A. Two volumes. Demy 8vo. 21s. net.
- See also Methuen's Universal Library.
- Smith (Horace and James). See Little Library.
- Snell (F. J.). A BOOK OF EXMOOR. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Sophocles. See Classical Translations.

Sornet (L. A.), Modern Language Master at King Edward School, Birmingham.
See Junior School Books.

South (Wilton E.), M.A. See Junior School Books.

Southee (R.) ENGLISH SEAMEN. Edited, with an Introduction, by DAVID HANNAY.
Vol. i. (Howard, Clifford, Hawkins, Drake, Cavendish). Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
Vol. ii. (Richard Hawkins, Grenville, Essex, and Raleigh). Crown 8vo. 6s.

Spence (C. H.), M.A., Clifton College. See School Examination Series.

Spooner (W. A.), M.A., Warden of New College, Oxford. See Leaders of Religion.

Stanbridge (J. W.), B.D., late Canon of York, and sometime Fellow of St. John's College, Oxford. See Library of Devotion.

'Stancilffe.' GOLF DO'S AND DONT'S. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

Stedman (A. M. M.), M.A.

INITIALATINA: Easy Lessons on Elementary Accidence. Seventh Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

FIRST LATIN LESSONS. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s.

FIRST LATIN READER. With Notes adapted to the Shorter Latin Primer and Vocabulary. Sixth Edition revised. 18mo. 1s. 6d.

EASY SELECTIONS FROM CÆSAR. The Helvetian War. Second Edition. 18mo. 1s.

EASY SELECTIONS FROM LIVY. Part i. The Kings of Rome. 18mo. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.

EASY LATIN PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION. Ninth Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

EXEMPLA LATINA. First Exercises in Latin Accidence. With Vocabulary. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s.

EASY LATIN EXERCISES ON THE SYNTAX OF THE SHORTER AND REVISED LATIN PRIMER. With Vocabulary. Ninth and Cheaper Edition, re-written. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d. Original Edition. 2s. 6d. KEY. 3s. net.

THE LATIN COMPOUND SENTENCE: Rules and Exercises. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d. With Vocabulary. 2s.

NOTANDA QUAEDAM: Miscellaneous Latin Exercises on Common Rules and Idioms. Fourth Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. With Vocabulary. 2s. Key, 2s. net.

LATIN VOCABULARIES FOR REPETITION: Arranged according to Subjects. Twelfth Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

A VOCABULARY OF LATIN IDIOMS. 18mo. Second Edition. 1s.

STEPS TO GREEK. Second Edition, revised. 18mo. 1s.

A SHORTER GREEK PRIMER. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

EASY GREEK PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION. Third Edition, revised. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

GREEK VOCABULARIES FOR REPETITION. Arranged according to Subjects. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

GREEK TESTAMENT SELECTIONS. For the use of Schools. With Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

STEPS TO FRENCH. Sixth Edition. 18mo. 8d.

FIRST FRENCH LESSONS. Sixth Edition, revised. Crown 8vo. 1s.

EASY FRENCH PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION. Fifth Edition, revised. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

EASY FRENCH EXERCISES ON ELEMENTARY SYNTAX. With Vocabulary. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. KEY. 3s. net.

FRENCH VOCABULARIES FOR REPETITION: Arranged according to Subjects. Twelfth Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

Steel (R. Elliott), M.A., F.C.S. THE WORLD OF SCIENCE. Including Chemistry, Heat, Light, Sound, Magnetism, Electricity, Botany, Zoology, Physiology, Astronomy, and Geology. 147 Illustrations. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. See also School Examination Series.

Stephenson (C.), of the Technical College, Bradford, and Suddards (F.) of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. ORNAMENTAL DESIGN FOR WOVEN FABRICS. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. Second Edition. 7s. 6d.

Stephenson (J.), M.A. THE CHIEF TRUTHS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Sterne (Laurence). See Little Library.

Sterry (W.), M.A. ANNALS OF ETON COLLEGE. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.

Steuart (Katherine). BY ALLAN WATER. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Stevenson (R. L.), THE LETTERS OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON TO HIS FAMILY AND FRIENDS. Selected and Edited, with Notes and Introductions, by SIDNEY COLVIN. Sixth and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo. 12s.

LIBRARY EDITION. Demy 8vo. 2 vols. 25s. net.

A Colonial Edition is also published.

VAILIMA LETTERS. With an Etched Portrait by WILLIAM STRANG. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. Buckram. 6s.

A Colonial Edition is also published.

THE LIFE OF R. L. STEVENSON. See G. Balfour.

STEVENSON (M. I.). FROM SARANAC TO THE MARQUESAS. Being Letters written by Mrs. M. I. STEVENSON during 1887-8 to her sister, Miss JANE WHYTE BALFOUR. With an Introduction by GEORGE W. BALFOUR, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S.S. Crown 8vo. 6s. net.

A Colonial Edition is also published.

STODDART (ANNA M.). See Oxford Biographies.

STONE (E. D.), M.A., late Assistant Master at Eton. SELECTIONS FROM THE ODYSSEY. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

STONE (S. J.). POEMS AND HYMNS. With a Memoir by F. G. ELLERTON, M.A. With Portrait. Crown 8vo. 6s.

STRAKER (F.), Assoc. of the Institute of Bankers, and Lecturer to the London Chamber of Commerce. See Books on Business.

STREANE (A. W.), D.D. See Churchman's Bible.

STROUD (H.), D.Sc., M.A., Professor of Physics in the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne. See Textbooks of Technology.

STRUTT (JOSEPH). THE SPORTS AND PASTIMES OF THE PEOPLE OF ENGLAND. Illustrated by many engravings. Revised by J. CHARLES COX, LL.D., F.S.A. Quarto. 21s. net.

STUART (CAPT. DONALD). THE STRUGGLE FOR PERSIA. With a Map. Crown 8vo. 6s.

STURCH (F.), Manual Training Instructor to the Surrey County Council. SOLUTIONS TO THE CITY AND GUILDS QUESTIONS IN MANUAL INSTRUCTION DRAWING. Imp. 4to. 2s.

SUCKLING (SIR JOHN). FRAGMENTA AUREA: a Collection of all the Incomparable Peices, written by. And published by a friend to perpetuate his memory. Printed by his own copies.

Printed for HUMPHREY MOSELEY, and are to be sold at his shop, at the sign of the Princes Arms in St. Paul's Churchyard, 1646.

SUDDARDS (F.). See C. Stephenson.

SURTEES (R. S.). See Illustrated Pocket Library.

SWIFT (JONATHAN). THE JOURNAL TO STELLA. Edited by G. A. AITKEN. Cr. 8vo. 6s.

SYMES (J. E.), M.A. THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

SYRETT (NETTAL). See Little Blue Books.

TACITUS. AGRICOLA. With Introduction, Notes, Map, etc. By R. F. DAVIS, M.A., late Assistant Master at Weymouth College. Fcap. 8vo. 2s.

GERMANIA. By the same Editor. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. See also Classical Translations.

TAULER (J.). See Library of Devotion.

TAUNTON (E. L.). A HISTORY OF THE JESUITS IN ENGLAND. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 21s. net.

TAYLOR (A. E.). THE ELEMENTS OF METAPHYSICS. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

TAYLOR (F. G.), M.A. See Commercial Series.

TAYLOR (I. A.). See Oxford Biographies.

TAYLOR (T. M.), M.A., Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. A CONSTITUTIONAL AND POLITICAL HISTORY OF ROME. Crown 8vo. 7s. 6d.

TENNYSON (ALFRED, LORD). THE EARLY POEMS OF. Edited, with Notes and an Introduction, by J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.

IN MEMORIAM, MAUD, AND THE PRINCESS. Edited by J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Little Library.

TERRY (C. S.). See Oxford Biographies.

TERTON (ALICE). LIGHTS AND SHADOWS IN A HOSPITAL. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

THACKERAY (W. M.). See Little Library.

THEOBALD (F. W.), M.A. INSECT LIFE. Illustrated. Second Ed. Revised. Cr. 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THOMPSON (A. H.). See The Little Guides.

ITLESTON (MARY W.). DAILY STRENGTH FOR DAILY NEEDS. Tenth Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. 6d. net. Also editions in superior binding 5s. and 6s.

TOPPKINS (H. W.), F.R.H.S. See The Little Guides.

TOWNLEY (LADY SUSAN). MY CHINESE NOTE-BOOK. With 16 Illustrations and 2 Maps. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

A Colonial Edition is also published.

TOYNBEE (PAGET), M.A., D.Litt. DANTE STUDIES AND RESEARCHES. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net. See also Oxford Biographies.

- Trench (Herbert). DEIRDRE WED: and Other Poems. Crown 8vo. 5s.
- Trevelyan (G. M.). Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. ENGLAND UNDER THE STUARTS. With Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
- Troubeck (G. E.). See The Little Guides.
- Tuckwell (Gertrude). See Social Questions Series.
- Twining (Louisa). See Social Questions Series.
- Tyler (E. A.), B.A., F.C.S. Head of Chemical Department, Swansea Technical College. See Junior School Books.
- Tyrell-Gill (Frances). See Little Books on Art.
- Vaughan (Henry). See Little Library.
- Voegelin (A.), M.A. See Junior Examination Series.
- Wade (G. W.), D.D. OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY. With Maps. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Wagner (Richard). See A. L. Cleather.
- Wall (J. C.) DEVILS. Illustrated by the Author and from photographs. Demy 8vo. 4s. 6d. net. See also The Antiquary's Books.
- Walters (H. B.). See Little Books on Art.
- Walton (Izaac) and Cotton (Charles). See Illustrated Pocket Library, Methuen's Universal Library, and Little Library.
- Warmelo (D. S. Van). ON COMMANDO. With Portrait. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Waterhouse (Mrs. Alfred). WITH THE SIMPLE-HEARTED: Little Homilies to Women in Country Places. Small Pott 8vo. 2s. net. See also Little Library.
- Weatherhead (T. C.), M.A. EXAMINATION PAPERS IN HORACE. Crown 8vo. 2s. See also Junior Examination Series.
- Webb (W. T.). See Little Blue Books.
- Webber (F. C.). See Textbooks of Technology.
- Wells (Sidney H.). See Textbooks of Technology.
- Wells (J.), M.A. Fellow and Tutor of Wadham College. OXFORD AND OXFORD LIFE. By Members of the University. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- A SHORT HISTORY OF ROME. Fifth Edition. With 3 Maps. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d. This book is intended for the Middle and Upper Forms of Public Schools and for Pass Students at the Universities. It contains copious Tables, etc. See also The Little Guides.
- Wetmore (Helen C.). THE LAST OF THE GREAT SCOUTS ('Buffalo Bill'). With Illustrations. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 6s.
- Whibley (C.). See Henley and Whibley.
- Whibley (L.), M.A. Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. GREEK OLIGARCHIES: THEIR ORGANISATION AND CHARACTER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Whitaker (G. H.), M.A. See Churchman's Bible.
- White (Gilbert). THE NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. Edited by L. C. MIALL, F.R.S., assisted by W. WARDE FOWLER, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Methuen's Universal Library.
- Whitfield (E. E.). See Commercial Series.
- Whitehead (A. W.). GASPARD DE COLIGNY With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
- Whitley (Miss). See Social Questions Series.
- Whyte (A. G.), B.Sc. Editor of Electrical Investments. See Books on Business.
- Wilberforce (Wilfrid). See Little Books on Art.
- Wilde (Oscar). DE PROFUNDIS. Crown 8vo. 5s. net. Also a Limited Edition on hand-made paper. Demy 8vo. 21s. net.
- Wilkins (W. H.), B.A. See Social Questions Series.
- Wilkinson (J. Frome). See Social Questions Series.
- Williamson (W.). THE BRITISH GARDENER. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.
- Williamson (W.), B.A. EASY DICTATION AND SPELLING. Third Edition. Feeble 8vo. 1s. See also Junior Examination Series and Junior School Books.
- Wilmot-Buxton (E. M.). MAKERS OF EUROPE. Crown 8vo. Third Edition. 3s. 6d. A Text-book of European History for Middle Forms.
- THE ANCIENT WORLD. With Maps and Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. See also The Beginner's Books.
- Wilson (Bishop). See Library of Devotion.
- Wilson (Beckles). LORD STRATHCONA: the Story of his Life. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Wilson (A. J.), Editor of the Investor's Review, City Editor of the Daily Chronicle. See Books on Business.
- Wilson (H. A.). See Books on Business.

- Wilton (Richard), M.A. LYRA PASTORALIS: Songs of Nature, Church, and Home. Pott 8vo. 2s. 6d.
 A volume of devotional poems.
- Winbolt (S. E.), M.A., Assistant Master in Christ's Hospital. EXERCISES IN LATIN ACCIDENCE. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.
 An elementary book adapted for Lower Forms to accompany the Shorter Latin Primer.
- LATIN HEXAMETER VERSE: An Aid to Composition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. Key, 5s. net.
- Windle (B. C. A.), D.Sc., F.R.S. See Antiquary's Books and The Little Guides.
- Winterbotham (Canon), M.A., B.Sc., LL.B. See Churchman's Library.
- Wood (J. A. E.). See Textbooks of Technology.
- Wordsworth (Christopher). See Antiquary's Books.
- Wordsworth (W.). See Little Library.
- Wordsworth (W.) and Coleridge (S. T.). See Little Library.
- Wright (Arthur), M.A., Fellow of Queen's College, Cambridge. See Churchman's Library.
- Wright (Sophie). GERMAN VOCABULARIES FOR REPETITION. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d.
- 'Wrong, (George M.), Professor of History in the University of Toronto. THE EARL OF ELGIN. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
- Wylde (A. B.). MODERN ABYSSINIA. With a Map and a Portrait. Demy 8vo. 15s. net.
- Wyndham (G.), M.P. THE POEMS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. With an Introduction and Notes. Demy 8vo. Buckram, gilt top. 10s. 6d.
- Wyon (R.) and Prance (G.). THE LAND OF THE BLACK MOUNTAIN. Being a description of Montenegro. With 40 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6s.
 A Colonial Edition is also published.
- Yeats (W. B.). AN ANTHOLOGY OF IRISH VERSE. Revised and Enlarged Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Yendis (M.). THE GREAT RED FROG. A Story told in 40 Coloured Pictures. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. net.
- Young (Filsom). THE COMPLETE MOTORIST. With 138 Illustrations. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
- Young (T. M.). THE AMERICAN COTTON INDUSTRY: A Study of Work and Workers. With an Introduction by ELIJAH HELM, Secretary to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. Crown 8vo. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 1s. 6d.
- Zenker (E. V.). ANARCHISM. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d.
- Zimmern (Antonia). WHAT DO WE KNOW CONCERNING ELECTRICITY? Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.

Antiquary's Books, The

General Editor, J. CHARLES COX, LL.D., F.S.A.

A series of volumes dealing with various branches of English Antiquities; comprehensive and popular, as well as accurate and scholarly.

ENGLISH MONASTIC LIFE. By the Right Rev. Abbot Gasquet, O.S.B. Illustrated. Second Edition, revised. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

REMAINS OF THE PREHISTORIC AGE IN ENGLAND. By E. C. A. Windle, D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

OLD SERVICE BOOKS OF THE ENGLISH CHURCH. By Christopher Wordsworth, M.A., and Henry Littlehales. With Coloured and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

CELTIC ART. By J. Romilly Allen, F.S.A. With numerous Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

*ARCHAEOLOGY AND FALSE ANTIQUITIES. By R. Munro, LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

SHRINES OF BRITISH SAINTS. By J. C. WALL. With numerous Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.

Beginner's Books, The

'EASY FRENCH RHYMES. By Henri Blouet. Illustrated. Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

'EASY STORIES FROM ENGLISH HISTORY. By E. M. Wilhnot-Buxton, Author of 'Makers of Europe.' Fcap. 8vo. 1s.

Business, Books on

Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. net.

A series of volumes dealing with all the most important aspects of commercial and financial activity. The volumes are intended to treat separately all the considerable industries and forms of business, and to explain accurately and clearly what they do and how they do it. The first Twelve volumes are—

- PORTS AND DOCKS. By Douglas Owen.
 RAILWAYS. By E. R. McDermott.
 THE STOCK EXCHANGE. By Chas. Duguid. Second Edition.
 THE BUSINESS OF INSURANCE. By A. J. Wilson.
 THE ELECTRICAL INDUSTRY: LIGHTING, TRACTION, AND POWER. By A. G. Whyte, B.Sc.
 THE SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY. By David Pollock, M.I.N.A.
 THE MONEY MARKET. By F. Straker.
 THE BUSINESS SIDE OF AGRICULTURE. By A. G. L. Rogers, M.A.
 LAW IN BUSINESS. By H. A. Wilson.
 THE BREWING INDUSTRY. By Julian L. Baker, F.I.C., F.C.S.
 THE AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY. By G. de H. Stone.
 MINING AND MINING INVESTMENTS. By 'A. Moil.'
 *THE BUSINESS OF ADVERTISING. By Clarence G. Moran, Barrister-at-Law. Illustrated.
 *TRADE UNIONS. By G. Drage.
 *CIVIL ENGINEERING. By T. Claxton Fidler, M.Inst. C.E. Illustrated.
 *THE COAL INDUSTRY. By Ernest Aves. Illustrated.

Byzantine Texts

Edited by J. B. BURY, M.A., Litt.D.

- A series of texts of Byzantine Historians, edited by English and foreign scholars.
 ZACHARIAH OF MITYLENE. Translated by F. J. Hamilton, D.D., and E. W. Brooks. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d. net.
 EVAGRIUS. Edited by Léon Parmentier and M. Bidez. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.
 THE HISTORY OF PSELLUS. Edited by C. Sathas. Demy 8vo. 15s. net.
 ECTHESIS CHRONICA. Edited by Professor Lambros. Demy 8vo. 7s. 6d. net.
 THE CHRONICLE OF MOREA. Edited by John Schmitt. Demy 8vo. 15s. net.

Churchman's Bible, The

General Editor, J. H. BURN, B.D., F.R.S.E.

A series of Expositions on the Books of the Bible, which will be of service to the general reader in the practical and devotional study of the Sacred Text.

Each Book is provided with a full and clear Introductory Section, in which is stated what is known or conjectured respecting the date and occasion of the composition of the Book, and any other particulars that may help to elucidate its meaning as a whole. The Exposition is divided into sections of a convenient length, corresponding as far as possible with the divisions of the Church Lectionary. The Translation of the Authorised Version is printed in full, such corrections as are deemed necessary being placed in footnotes.

THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS. Edited by A. W. Robinson, M.A. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.

ECCLESIASTES. Edited by A. W. Streane, D.D. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.

THE EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS. Edited by C. R. D. Biggs, D.D. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.

THE EPISTLE OF ST. JAMES. Edited by H. W. Fulford, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.

ISAIAH. Edited by W. E. Barnes, D.D. Two Volumes. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. net each. With Map.

THE EPISTLE OF ST. PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE EPHESIANS. Edited by G. H. Whitaker, M.A. Fcap. 8vo. 1s. 6d. net.

Churchman's Library, The

General Editor, J. H. BURN, B.D., F.R.S.E.,

A series of volumes upon such questions as are occupying the attention of Church people at the present time. The Editor has enlisted the services of a band of scholars, who, having made a special study of their respective subjects, are in a position to furnish the best results of modern research accurately and attractively.

THE BEGINNINGS OF ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By W. E. Collins, M.A. With Map. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

SOME NEW TESTAMENT PROBLEMS. By Arthur Wright, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.

- THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN HERE AND HEREAFTER. By Canon Winterbotham, M.A., B.Sc., LL.B. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- THE WORKMANSHIP OF THE PRAYER BOOK: Its Literary and Liturgical Aspects. By J. Dowden, D.D. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- EVOLUTION. By F. B. Jevons, M.A., Litt.D. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- THE OLD TESTAMENT AND THE NEW SCHOLARSHIP. By J. W. Peters, D.D. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE CHURCHMAN'S INTRODUCTION TO THE OLD TESTAMENT. By A. M. Mackay, B.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- THE CHURCH OF CHRIST. By E. T. Green, M.A. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- COMPARATIVE THEOLOGY. By J. A. MacCulloch. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Classical Translations

Edited by H. F. FOX, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford.
Crown 8vo.

A series of Translations from the Greek and Latin Classics. The Publishers have enlisted the services of some of the best Oxford and Cambridge Scholars, and it is their intention that the series shall be distinguished by literary excellence as well as by scholarly accuracy.

- ÆSCHYLUS—Agamemnon, Choephorœ, Eumenides. Translated by Lewis Campbell, LL.D. 5s.
- CICERO—De Oratore I. Translated by E. N. P. Moor, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- CICERO—Select Orations (Pro Milone, Pro Mureno, Philippic II., in Catilinam). Translated by H. E. D. BLAKISTON, M.A. 5s.
- CICERO—De Natura Deorum. Translated by F. Brooks, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- CICERO—De Officiis. Translated by G. B. Gardiner, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- HORACE—The Odes and Epodes. Translated by A. D. Godley, M.A. 2s.
- LUCIAN—Six Dialogues (Nigrinus, Icaro-Menippus, The Cock, The Ship, The Parasite, The Lover of Falsehood). Translated by S. T. Irwin, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- SOPHOCLES—Electra and Ajax. Translated by E. D. A. Morshead, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- TACITUS—Agricola and Germania. Translated by R. B. Townshend. 2s. 6d.
- THE SATIRES OF JUVENAL. Translated by S. G. Owen. 2s. 6d.

Commercial Series, Methuen's

Edited by H. DE B. GIBBINS, Litt.D., M.A.
Crown 8vo.

A series intended to assist students and young men preparing for a commercial career, by supplying useful handbooks of a clear and practical character, dealing with those subjects which are absolutely essential in the business life.

- COMMERCIAL EDUCATION IN THEORY AND PRACTICE. By E. E. Whitfield, M.A. 5s.
- An introduction to Methuen's Commercial Series treating the question of Commercial Education fully from both the point of view of the teacher and of the parent.
- BRITISH COMMERCE AND COLONIES FROM ELIZABETH TO VICTORIA. By H. de B. Gibbins, Litt.D., M.A. Third Edition. 2s.
- COMMERCIAL EXAMINATION PAPERS. By H. de B. Gibbins, Litt.D., M.A. 1s. 6d.
- THE ECONOMICS OF COMMERCE. By H. de B. Gibbins, Litt.D., M.A. 1s. 6d.
- A GERMAN COMMERCIAL READER. By S. E. Bally. With Vocabulary. 2s.
- A COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE. By L. W. Lyde, M.A. Fourth Edition. 2s.
- A COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY OF FOREIGN NATIONS. By F. C. Boon, B.A. 2s.
- A PRIMER OF BUSINESS. By S. Jackson, M.A. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.
- COMMERCIAL ARITHMETIC. By F. G. Taylor, M.A. Third Edition. 1s. 6d.
- FRENCH COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE. By S. E. Bally. With Vocabulary. Third Edition. 2s.
- GERMAN COMMERCIAL CORRESPONDENCE. By S. E. Bally. With Vocabulary. 2s. 6d.
- A FRENCH COMMERCIAL READER. By S. E. Bally. With Vocabulary. Second Edition. 2s.
- PRECIS WRITING AND OFFICE CORRESPONDENCE. By E. E. Whitfield, M.A. Second Edition. 2s.
- A GUIDE TO PROFESSIONS AND BUSINESS. By H. Jones. 1s. 6d.
- THE PRINCIPLES OF BOOK-KEEPING BY DOUBLE ENTRY. By J. E. B. M'Allen, M.A. 2s.
- COMMERCIAL LAW. By W. Douglas Edwards. 2s.

Connoisseur's Library, TheWide Royal 8vo. 25s. net.*

A sumptuous series of 20 books on art, written by experts for collectors, superbly illustrated in photogravure, collotype, and colour. The technical side of the art is duly treated. The first volumes are—

MEZZOTINTS. By Cyril Davenport. With 40 Plates in Photogravure.

PORCELAIN. By Edward Dillon. With 19 Plates in Colour, 20 in Collotype, and 5 in Photogravure.

*MINIATURES. By Dudley Heath. With 9 Plates in Colour, 15 in Collotype, and 15 in Photogravure.

*IVORIES. By A. Maskell. With 80 Plates in Collotype and Photogravure.

Devotion, The Library of

With Introductions and (where necessary) Notes.

Small Pott 8vo, cloth, 2s. ; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

The masterpieces of devotional literature. The books are furnished with such Introductions and Notes as may be necessary to explain the standpoint of the author and the obvious difficulties of the text, without unnecessary intrusion between the author and the devout mind.

THE CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. Edited by C. Bigg, D.D. Third Edition.
 THE CHRISTIAN YEAR. Edited by Walter Lock, D.D. Second Edition.
 THE IMITATION OF CHRIST. Edited by C. Bigg, D.D. Fourth Edition.
 A BOOK OF DEVOTIONS. Edited by J. W. Stanbridge, B.D. Second Edition.
 LYRA INNOCENTIUM. Edited by Walter Lock, D.D.
 A SERIOUS CALL TO A DEVOUT AND HOLY LIFE. Edited by C. Bigg, D.D. Second Edition.
 THE TEMPLE. Edited by E. C. S. Gibson, D.D.
 A GUIDE TO ETERNITY. Edited by J. W. Stanbridge, B.D.
 THE PSALMS OF DAVID. Edited by B. W. Randolph, D.D.
 LYRA APOSTOLICA. Edited by Canon Scott Holland and Canon H. C. Beeching, M.A.
 THE INNER WAY. Edited by A. W. Hutton, M.A.
 THE THOUGHTS OF PASCAL. Edited by C. S. Jerram, M.A.
 ON THE LOVE OF GOD. By St. Francis de Sales. Edited by W. J. Knox-Little, M.A.
 A MANUAL OF CONSOLATION FROM THE SAINTS AND FATHERS. Edited by J. H. Burn, B.D.
 THE SONG OF SONGS. Edited by B. Blaxland, M.A.
 THE DEVOTIONS OF ST. ANSELM. Edited by C. C. J. Webb, M.A.
 GRACE ABOUNDING. By John Bunyan. Edited by S. C. Freer, M.A.
 BISHOP WILSON'S SACRA PRIVATA. Edited by A. E. Burn, B.D.
 LYRA SACRA: A Book of Sacred Verse. Edited by H. C. Beeching, M.A, Canon of Westminster.
 A DAY BOOK FROM THE SAINTS AND FATHERS. Edited by J. H. Burn, B.D.
 HEAVENLY WISDOM. A Selection from the English Mystics. Edited by E. C. Gregory.
 LIGHT, LIFE, and LOVE. A Selection from the German Mystics. Edited by W. R. Inge, M.A.

Illustrated Pocket Library of Plain and Coloured Books, TheFcap 8vo. 3s. 6d. net each volume.*

A series, in small form, of some of the famous illustrated books of fiction and general literature. These are faithfully reprinted from the first or best editions without introduction or notes.

COLOURED BOOKS

OLD COLOURED BOOKS. By George Paston. With 16 Coloured Plates. Fcap. 8vo. 2s. net.
 THE LIFE AND DEATH OF JOHN MYTON, Esq. By Nimrod. With 18 Coloured Plates by Henry Alken and T. J. Rawlins. Third Edition. 3s. 6d. net.

Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.

THE LIFE OF A SPORTSMAN. By Nimrod. With 35 Coloured Plates by Henry Alken. 3s. 6d. net.

Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.

HANDLEY CROSS. By R. S. SURTEES. With 17 Coloured Plates and 100 Woodcuts in the Text by John Leech. 3s. 6d. net.

Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.

MR. SPONGE'S SPORTING TOUR. By R. S. Surtees. With 13 Coloured Plates and 90 Woodcuts in the Text by John Leech. 3s. 6d. net.

Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.

- JORROCKS' JAUNTS AND JOLLITIES. By R. S. Surtees. With 25 Coloured Plates by H. Alken. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
 This volume is reprinted from the extremely rare and costly edition of 1843, which contains Alken's very fine illustrations instead of the usual ones by Phiz.
- ASK MAMMA. By R. S. Surtees. With 13 Coloured Plates and 70 Woodcuts in the Text by John Leech. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- THE ANALYSIS OF THE HUNTING FIELD. By R. S. Surtees. With 7 Coloured Plates by Henry Alken, and 43 Illustrations on Wood. 3s. 6d. net.
- THE TOUR OF DR. SYNTAX IN SEARCH OF THE PICTURESQUE. By William Combe. With 30 Coloured Plates by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- THE TOUR OF DOCTOR SYNTAX IN SEARCH OF CONSOLATION. By William Combe. With 24 Coloured Plates by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- THE THIRD TOUR OF DOCTOR SYNTAX IN SEARCH OF A WIFE. By William Combe. With 24 Coloured Plates by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- THE HISTORY OF JOHNNY QUACKENBUSH: the Little Foundling of the late Dr. Syntax. By the Author of 'The Three Tours.' With 24 Coloured Plates by Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- THE ENGLISH DANCE OF DEATH, from the Designs of T. Rowlandson, with Metrical Illustrations by the Author of 'Doctor Syntax.' Two Volumes. 7s. net.
 This book contains 76 Coloured Plates.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- THE DANCE OF LIFE: A Poem. By the Author of 'Doctor Syntax.' Illustrated with 26 Coloured Engravings by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- LIFE IN LONDON: or, the Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., and his Elegant Friend, Corinthian Tom. By Pierce Egan. With 36 Coloured Plates by I. R. and G. Cruikshank. With numerous Designs on Wood. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
- *REAL LIFE IN LONDON: or, the Rambles and Adventures of Bob Tallyho, Esq., and his Cousin, The Hon. Tom Dashall. By an Amateur (Pierce Egan). With 31 Coloured Plates by Alken and Rowlandson, etc. Two Volumes. 7s. net.
- THE LIFE OF AN ACTOR. By Pierce Egan. With 27 Coloured Plates by Theodore Lane, and several Designs on Wood. 3s. 6d. net.
- THE VICAR OF WAKEFIELD. By Oliver Goldsmith. With 24 Coloured Plates by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
 A reproduction of a very rare book.
- THE MILITARY ADVENTURES OF JOHNNY NEWCOME. By an Officer. With 15 Coloured Plates by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
- THE NATIONAL SPORTS OF GREAT BRITAIN. With Descriptions and 51 Coloured Plates by Henry Alken. 3s. 6d. net.
 Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper. 30s. net.
 This book is completely different from the large folio edition of 'National Sports' by the same artist, and none of the plates are similar.
- THE ADVENTURES OF A POST CAPTAIN. By A Naval Officer. With 24 Coloured Plates by Mr. Williams. 3s. 6d. net.
- *GAMONIA: or, the Art of Preserving Game; and an Improved Method of making Plantations and Covers, explained and illustrated by Lawrence Rawstorne, Esq. With 15 Coloured Plates by T. Rawlins. 3s. 6d. net.
- AN ACADEMY FOR GROWN HORSEMAN: Containing the completest Instructions for Walking, Trotting, Cantering, Galloping, Stumbling, and Tumbling. Illustrated with 27 Coloured Plates, and adorned with a Portrait of the Author. By Geoffrey Gambado, Esq. 3s. 6d. net.
- REAL LIFE IN IRELAND, or, the Day and Night Scenes of Brian Boru, Esq., and his Elegant Friend, Sir Shawn O'Dogherty. By a Real Paddy. With 19 Coloured Plates by Heath, Marks, etc. 3s. 6d. net.
- THE ADVENTURES OF JOHNNY NEWCOME IN THE NAVY. By Alfred Burton. With 16 Coloured Plates by T. Rowlandson. 3s. 6d. net.
- *THE OLD ENGLISH SQUIRE: A Poem. By John Careless, Esq. With 20 Coloured Plates after the style of T. Rowlandson.

PLAIN BOOKS

THE GRAVE : A Poem. By Robert Blair. Illustrated by 12 Etchings executed by Louis Schiavonetti from the original Inventions of William Blake. With an Engraved Title Page and a Portrait of Blake by T. Phillips, R.A. 3s. 6d. net.

The illustrations are reproduced in photogravure. Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper, with India proofs and a duplicate set of the plates. 15s. net.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE BOOK OF JOB. Invented and engraved by William Blake. 3s. 6d. net.

These famous Illustrations—21 in number—are reproduced in photogravure. Also a limited edition on large Japanese paper, with India proofs and a duplicate set of the plates. 15s. net.

ÆSOP'S FABLES. With 380 Woodcuts by Thomas Bewick. 3s. 6d. net.

WINDSOR CASTLE. By W. Harrison Ainsworth. With 22 Plates and 87 Woodcuts in the Text by George Cruikshank. 3s. 6d. net.

THE TOWER OF LONDON. By W. Harrison Ainsworth. With 40 Plates and 58 Woodcuts in the Text by George Cruikshank. 3s. 6d. net.

FRANK FAIRLEIGH. By F. E. Smedley. With 30 Plates by George Cruikshank. 3s. 6d. net.

HANDY ANDY. By Samuel Lover. With 24 Illustrations by the Author. 3s. 6d. net.

THE COMPLEAT ANGLER. By Izaak Walton and Charles Cotton. With 14 Plates and 77 Woodcuts in the Text. 3s. 6d. net.

This volume is reproduced from the beautiful edition of John Major of 1824.

THE PICKWICK PAPERS. By Charles Dickens. With the 43 Illustrations by Seymour and Phiz, the two Buss Plates, and the 32 Contemporary Onwhyn Plates. 3s. 6d. net.

Junior Examination Series

Edited by A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. Ccap. 8vo. 1s.

This series is intended to lead up to the School Examination Series, and is intended for the use of teachers and students, to supply material for the former and practice for the latter. The papers are carefully graduated, cover the whole of the subject usually taught, and are intended to form part of the ordinary class work. They may be used vivæ voce or as a written examination.

JUNIOR FRENCH EXAMINATION PAPERS. By F. Jacob, M.A.

JUNIOR LATIN EXAMINATION PAPERS. By C. G. Botting, M.A. Second Edition.

JUNIOR ENGLISH EXAMINATION PAPERS. By W. Williamson, M.A.

JUNIOR ARITHMETIC EXAMINATION PAPERS. By W. S. Beard. Second Edition.

JUNIOR ALGEBRA EXAMINATION PAPERS. By S. W. Finn, M.A.

JUNIOR GREEK EXAMINATION PAPERS. By T. C. Weatherhead, M.A.

JUNIOR GENERAL INFORMATION EXAMINATION PAPERS. By W. S. Beard.

JUNIOR GEOGRAPHY EXAMINATION PAPERS. By W. G. Baker, M.A.

JUNIOR GERMAN EXAMINATION PAPERS. By A. Voegelin, M.A.

Junior School-Books, Methuen's

Edited by O. D. INSKIP, LL.D., and W. WILLIAMSON, B.A.

A series of elementary books for pupils in lower forms, simply written by teachers of experience.

A CLASS-BOOK OF DICTATION PASSAGES. By W. Williamson, B.A. Ninth Edition. Cr. 8vo. 1s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW. Edited by E. Wilton South, M.A. With Three Maps. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MARK. Edited by A. E. Rubie, D.D. With Three Maps. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

A JUNIOR ENGLISH GRAMMAR. By W. Williamson, B.A. With numerous passages for parsing and analysis, and a chapter on Essay Writing. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s.

A JUNIOR CHEMISTRY. By E. A. Tyler, B.A., F.C.S. With 73 Illustrations. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. Edited by A. E. Rubie, D.D. Crown 8vo. 2s.

A JUNIOR FRENCH GRAMMAR. By L. A. Sornet and M. J. Acatos. Crown 8vo. 2s.

ELEMENTARY EXPERIMENTAL SCIENCE. PHYSICS by W. T. Clough, A.R.C.S. CHEMISTRY by A. E. Dunstan, B.Sc. With 2 Plates and 154 Diagrams. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

A JUNIOR GEOMETRY. By Noel S. Lydon. With 230 Diagrams. Crown 8vo. 2s.

*A JUNIOR MAGNETISM AND ELECTRICITY. By W. T. CLOUGH. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.

*ELEMENTARY EXPERIMENTAL CHEMISTRY. By A. E. Dunstan, B.Sc. With many Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 2s.

*A JUNIOR FRENCH PROSE. By R. R. N. Baron, M.A. Crown 8vo. 2s.

*THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE. With an Introduction and Notes by William Williamson, B.A. With Three Maps. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

Leaders of Religion

Edited by H. C. BEECHING, M.A., Canon of Westminster. With Portraits.
Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

A series of short biographies of the most prominent leaders of religious life and thought of all ages and countries.

- CARDINAL NEWMAN. By R. H. Hutton.
 JOHN WESLEY. By J. H. Overton, M.A.
 BISHOP WILBERFORCE. By G. W. Daniell, M.A.
 CARDINAL MANNING. By A. W. Hutton, M.A.
 CHARLES SIMEON. By H. C. G. Moule, D.D.
 JOHN KEBLE. By Walter Lock, D.D.
 THOMAS CHALMERS. By Mrs. Oliphant.
 LANCELOT ANDREWES. By R. L. Ottley, D.D. Second Edition.
 AUGUSTINE OF CANTERBURY. By E. L. Cutts, D.D.

- WILLIAM LAUD. By W. H. Hutton, M.A. Second Edition.
 JOHN KNOX. By F. MacCunn. Second Edition.
 JOHN HOWE. By R. F. Horton, D.D.
 BISHOP KEN. By F. A. Clarke, M.A.
 GEORGE FOX, THE QUAKER. By T. Hodgkin, D.C.L.
 JOHN DONNE. By Augustus Jessopp, D.D.
 THOMAS CRAMER. By A. J. Mason, D.D.
 BISHOP LATIMER. By R. M. Carlyle and A. J. Carlyle, M.A.
 BISHOP BUTLER. By W. A. Spooner, M.A.

Little Blue Books, The

General Editor, E. V. LUCAS.

Illustrated. Demy 16mo. 2s. 6d.

A series of books for children. The aim of the editor is to get entertaining or exciting stories about normal children, the moral of which is implied rather than expressed.

1. THE CASTAWAYS OF MEADOWBANK. By Thomas Cobb.
2. THE BEECHNUT BOOK. By Jacob Abbott. Edited by E. V. Lucas.
3. THE AIR GUN. By T. Hilbert.
4. A SCHOOL YEAR. By Netta Syrett.
5. THE PEELES AT THE CAPITAL. By Roger Ashton.
6. THE TREASURE OF PRINCEGATE PRIORY. By T. Cobb.
7. MRS. BERRY'S GENERAL SHOP. By Roger Ashton.
8. A BOOK OF BAD CHILDREN. By W. T. Webb.
9. THE LOST BALL. By Thomas Cobb.

Little Books on Art

With many Illustrations. Demy 16mo. 2s. 6d. net.

A series of monographs in miniature, containing the complete outline of the subject under treatment and rejecting minute details. These books are produced with the greatest care. Each volume consists of about 200 pages, and contains from 30 to 40 illustrations, including a frontispiece in photogravure.

- GREEK ART. H. B. Walters.
 BOOKPLATES. E. Almack.
 REYNOLDS. J. Sime.
 ROMNEY. George Paston.
 WATTS. Miss R. E. D. Sketchley.
 LEIGHTON. Alice Corkran.
 VELASQUEZ. Wilfrid Wilberforce and A. R. Gilbert.
 GREUZE AND BOUCHER. Eliza F. Pollard.
 VANDYCK. M. G. SMALLWOOD.

- TURNER. F. Tyrell-Gill.
 DÜRER. Jessie Allen.
 HOPPNER. H. P. K. Skipton.
 HOLBEIN. Mrs. G. Fortescue.
 BURNE-JONES. Fortunée de Lisle.
 REMBRANDT. Mrs. E. A. Sharp.
 COROT. Alice Pollard and Ethel Birnstingl.
 *RAPHAEL. A. R. D'YVYHURST.
 *MILLET. Netta Peacock.
 *ILLUMINATED MSS. J. W. Bradley.

Little Galleries, The

Demy 16mo. 2s. 6d. net.

A series of little books containing examples of the best work of the great painters. Each volume contains 20 plates in photogravure, together with a short outline of the life and work of the master to whom the book is devoted.

- A LITTLE GALLERY OF REYNOLDS.
 A LITTLE GALLERY OF ROMNEY.

A LITTLE GALLERY OF ENGLISH PORTS.

- A LITTLE GALLERY OF HOPPNER.
 A LITTLE GALLERY OF MILLAIS.

Little Guides, TheSmall Pott 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.; leather, 3s. 6d. net.*OXFORD AND ITS COLLEGES. By J. Wells, M.A. Illustrated by E. H. New. *Fourth Edition.*CAMBRIDGE AND ITS COLLEGES. By A. Hamilton Thompson. Second Edition. Illustrated by E. H. New.

THE MALVERN COUNTRY. By B. C. A. Windle, D.Sc., F.R.S. Illustrated by E. H. New.

SHAKESPEARE'S COUNTRY. By B. C. A. Windle, D.Sc., F.R.S. Illustrated by E. H. New. Second Edition.

SUSSEX. By F. G. Brabant, M.A. Illustrated by E. H. New.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By G. E. Troutbeck. Illustrated by F. D. Bedford.

NORFOLK. By W. A. Dutt. Illustrated by B. C. Boulter.

CORNWALL. By A. L. Salmon. Illustrated by B. C. Boulter.

BRITANNIA. By S. Baring-Gould. Illustrated by J. Wylie.

HERTFORDSHIRE. By H. W. Tompkins, F.R.H.S. Illustrated by E. H. New.

THE ENGLISH LAKES. By F. G. Brabant, M.A. Illustrated by E. H. New.

KENT. By G. Clinch. Illustrated by F. D. Bedford.

ROME. By C. G. Ellaby. Illustrated by B. C. Boulter.

THE ISLE OF WIGHT. By G. Clinch. Illustrated by F. D. Bedford.

SURREY. By F. A. H. Lambert. Illustrated by E. H. New.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE. By E. S. Roscoe. Illustrated by F. D. Bedford.

SUFFOLK. By W. A. Dutt. Illustrated by J. Wylie.

DERBYSHIRE. By J. C. Cox, LL.D., F.S.A. Illustrated by J. C. Wall.

THE NORTH RIDING OF YORKSHIRE. By J. E. Morris. Illustrated by R. J. S. Bertram.

HAMPSHIRE. By J. C. Cox. Illustrated by M. E. Purser.

SICILY. By F. H. Jackson. With many Illustrations by the Author.

*DORSET. By Frank R. Heath. Illustrated.

*CHESHIRE. By W. M. Gallichan. Illustrated by Elizabeth Hartley.

Little Library, The

With Introductions, Notes, and Photogravure Frontispieces.

Small Pott 8vo. Each Volume, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

A series of small books under the above title, containing some of the famous works in English and other literatures, in the domains of fiction, poetry, and belles lettres. The series also contains volumes of selections in prose and verse.

The books are edited with the most sympathetic and scholarly care. Each one contains an introduction which gives (1) a short biography of the author; (2) a critical estimate of the book. Where they are necessary, short notes are added at the foot of the page.

Each volume has a photogravure frontispiece, and the books are produced with great care.

ENGLISH LYRICS, A LITTLE BOOK OF. Anon.

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE. By Jane Austen. Edited by E. V. Lucas. Two Volumes.

NORTHANGER ABBEY. By Jane Austen. Edited by E. V. Lucas.

THE ESSAYS OF LORD BACON. Edited by Edward Wright.

THE INGOLSBY LEGENDS. By R. H. Barham. Edited by J. E. Atlay. Two Volumes.

A LITTLE BOOK OF ENGLISH PROSE. Edited by Mrs. P. A. Barnett.

THE HISTORY OF THE CALIPH VATHEK. By William Beckford. Edited by E. Denison Ross.

SELECTIONS FROM WILLIAM BLAKE. Edited by M. Perugini.

LAVENGRO. By George Borrow. Edited by F. Hindes Groome. Two Volumes.

THE ROMANY RVE. By George Borrow. Edited by John Sampson.

SELECTIONS FROM THE EARLY POEMS OF ROBERT BROWNING. Edited by W. Hall Griffin, M.A.

SELECTIONS FROM THE ANTI-JACOBIN; with George Canning's additional Poems. Edited by Lloyd Sanders.

THE ESSAYS OF ABRAHAM COWLEY. Edited by H. C. Minchin.

SELECTIONS FROM GEORGE CRABBE. Edited by A. C. Deane.

JOHN HALIFAX GENTLEMAN. By Mrs. Craik. Edited by Annie Matheson. Two Volumes.

THE ENGLISH POEMS OF RICHARD CRAWSHAW. Edited by Edward Hutton.

THE INFERNAL OF DANTE. Translated by H. F. Cary. Edited by Paget Toynbee, M.A., D. Litt.

THE PURGATORIO OF DANTE. Translated by H. F. Cary. Edited by Paget Toynbee, M.A., D. Litt.

- THE PARADISO OF DANTE. Translated by H. F. Cary. Edited by Paget Toynbee, M.A., D.Litt.
- SELECTIONS FROM THE POEMS OF GEORGE DARLEY. Edited by R. A. Streatfeild.
- A LITTLE BOOK OF LIGHT VERSE. Edited by A. C. Deane.
- MARRIAGE. By Susan Ferrier. Edited by Miss Goodrich Freer and Lord Iddesleigh. Two Volumes.
- THE INHERITANCE. By Susan Ferrier. Edited by Miss Goodrich Freer and Lord Iddesleigh. Two Volumes.
- CRANFORD. By Mrs. Gaskell. Edited by E. V. Lucas.
- THE SCARLET LETTER. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Edited by Percy Dearmer.
- A LITTLE BOOK OF SCOTTISH VERSE. Edited by T. F. Henderson.
- POEMS. By John Keats. With an Introduction by L. Binyon and Notes by J. MASEFIELD.
- EOTHEN. By A. W. Kinglake. With an Introduction and Notes.
- ELIA, AND THE LAST ESSAYS OF ELIA. By Charles Lamb. Edited by E. V. Lucas.
- LONDON LYRICS. By F. Locker. Edited by A. D. Godley, M.A.
- A reprint of the First Edition.
- SELECTIONS FROM LONGFELLOW. Edited by L. M. Faithfull.
- THE POEMS OF ANDREW MARVELL. Edited by E. Wright.
- THE MINOR POEMS OF JOHN MILTON. Edited by H. C. BEECHING, M.A.
- MANSIE WAUCH. By D. M. Moir. Edited by T. F. Henderson.
- A LITTLE BOOK OF ENGLISH SONNETS. Edited by J. B. B. Nichols.
- THE MAXIMS OF LA ROCHEFOUCAULD. Translated by Dean Stanhope. Edited by G. H. Powell.
- REJECTED ADDRESSES. By Horace and James Smith. Edited by A. D. Godley, M.A.
- A SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY. By Laurence Sterne. Edited by H. W. Paul.
- THE EARLY POEMS OF ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. Edited by J. Churton Collins, M.A.
- IN MEMORIAM. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Edited by H. C. Beeching, M.A.
- THE PRINCESS. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Edited by Elizabeth Wordsworth.
- MAUD. By Alfred, Lord Tennyson. Edited by Elizabeth Wordsworth.
- VANITY FAIR. By W. M. Thackeray. Edited by S. Gwynn. Three Volumes.
- PENDENNIS. By W. M. Thackeray. Edited by S. Gwynn. Three Volumes.
- ESMOND. By W. M. Thackeray. Edited by S. Gwynn.
- CHRISTMAS BOOKS. By W. M. Thackeray. Edited by S. Gwynn.
- THE POEMS OF HENRY VAUGHAN. Edited by Edward Hutton.
- THE COMPLEAT ANGLER. By Izaak Walton. Edited by J. Buchan.
- A LITTLE BOOK OF LIFE AND DEATH. Edited by Mrs. Alfred Waterhouse. Sixth Edition.
- SELECTIONS FROM WORDSWORTH. Edited by Nowell C. Smith.
- LYRICAL BALLADS. By W. Wordsworth and S. T. Coleridge. Edited by George Sampson.

Miniature Library, Methuen's

Reprints in miniature of a few interesting books which have qualities of humanity, devotion, or literary genius.

- EUPHRANOR: A Dialogue on Youth. By Edward FitzGerald. From the edition published by W. Pickering in 1851. Demy 32mo. Leather, 2s. net.
- POLONIUS: or Wise Saws and Modern Instances. By Edward FitzGerald. From the edition published by W. Pickering in 1852. Demy 32mo. Leather, 2s. net.
- THE RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM. By Edward FitzGerald. From the 1st edition of 1859, Second Edition. Leather, 2s. net.
- THE LIFE OF EDWARD, LORD HERBERT OF CHERBURY. Written by himself. From the edition printed at Strawberry Hill in the year 1764. Medium 32mo. Leather, 2s. net.
- THE VISIONS OF DOM FRANCISCO QUEVEDO VILLEGAS, Knight of the Order of St. James Made English by R. L. From the edition printed for H. Herringman 1668. Leather, 2s. net.
- POEMS. By Dora Greenwell. From the edition of 1848. Leather, 2s. net.

The Oxford Biographies

Fee. 8vo. Each volume, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

These books are written by scholars of repute, who combine knowledge and literary skill with the power of popular presentation. They are illustrated from authentic material.

- DANTE ALIGHIERI. By Paget Toynbee, M.A., D.Litt. With 12 Illustrations. Second Edition.
- SAVONAROLA. By E. L. S. Horsburgh, M.A. With 12 Illustrations. Second Edition.
- JOHN HOWARD. By E. C. S. Gibson, D.D., Vicar of Leeds. With 12 Illustrations.

- TENNYSON. By A. C. BENSON, M.A. With 9 Illustrations.
 WALTER RALEIGH. By I. A. Taylor. With 12 Illustrations.
 ERASMUS. By E. F. H. Capey. With 12 Illustrations.
 THE YOUNG PRETENDER. By C. S. Terry. With 12 Illustrations.
 ROBERT BURNS. By T. F. Henderson. With 12 Illustrations.
 CHATHAM. By A. S. M'Dowall. With 12 Illustrations.
 ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI. By Anna M. Stoddart. With 16 Illustrations.
 CANNING. By W. A. Phillips. With 12 Illustrations.
 BEACONSFIELD. By Walter Sickel. With 12 Illustrations.
 GOETHE. By H. G. Atkins. With 12 Illustrations.

School Examination Series

- Edited by A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
 FRENCH EXAMINATION PAPERS. By A. M. M. Stedman, M.A. Twelfth Edition.
 A KEY, issued to Tutors and Private Students only to be had on application to the Publishers. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s. net.
 LATIN EXAMINATION PAPERS. By A. M. M. Stedman, M.A. Twelfth Edition.
 KEY (Fourth Edition) issued as above. 6s. net.
 GREEK EXAMINATION PAPERS. By A. M. M. Stedman, M.A. Seventh Edition.
 KEY (Second Edition) issued as above. 6s. net.
 GERMAN EXAMINATION PAPERS. By R. J. Morich. Fifth Edition.
 KEY (Second Edition) issued as above. 6s. net.
 HISTORY AND GEOGRAPHY EXAMINATION PAPERS. By C. H. Spence, M.A. Second Edition.
 PHYSICS EXAMINATION PAPERS. By R. E. Steel, M.A., F.C.S.
 GENERAL KNOWLEDGE EXAMINATION PAPERS. By A. M. M. Stedman, M.A. Fourth Edition.
 KEY (Third Edition) issued as above. 7s. net.
 EXAMINATION PAPERS IN ENGLISH HISTORY. By J. Tait Plowden-Wardlaw, B.A.

Social Questions of To-day

- Edited by H. DE B. GIBBINS, Litt.D., M.A. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d.
 A series of volumes upon those topics of social, economic, and industrial interest that are foremost in the public mind.
 Each volume is written by an author who is an acknowledged authority upon the subject with which he deals.
 TRADE UNIONISM—NEW AND OLD. By G. Howell. Third Edition.
 THE CO-OPERATIVE MOVEMENT TO-DAY. By G. J. Holyoake. Second Edition.
 MUTUAL THRIFT. By J. Frome Wilkinson, M.A.
 PROBLEMS OF POVERTY. By J. A. Hobson, M.A. Fourth Edition.
 THE COMMERCE OF NATIONS. By C. F. Bastable, M.A. Third Edition.
 THE ALIEN INVASION. By W. H. Wilkins, B.A.
 THE RURAL EXODUS. By P. Anderson Graham.
 LAND NATIONALIZATION. By Harold Cox, B.A.
 A SHORTER WORKING DAY. By H. de Gibbins and R. A. Hadfield.
 BACK TO THE LAND. An Inquiry into Rural Depopulation. By H. E. Moore.
 TRUSTS, POOLS, AND CORNERS. By J. Stephen Jeans.
 THE FACTORY SYSTEM. By R. W. Cooke-Taylor.
 THE STATE AND ITS CHILDREN. By Gertrude Tuckwell.
 WOMEN'S WORK. By Lady Dilke, Miss Bulley, and Miss Whitley.
 SOCIALISM AND MODERN THOUGHT. By M. Kauffmann.
 THE PROBLEM OF THE UNEMPLOYED. By J. A. Hobson, M.A.
 LIFE IN WEST LONDON. By Arthur Sherwell, M.A. Third Edition.
 RAILWAY NATIONALIZATION. By Clement Edwards.
 WORKHOUSES AND PAUPERISM. By Louisa Twining.
 UNIVERSITY AND SOCIAL SETTLEMENTS. By W. Reason, M.A.

Technology, Textbooks of

- Edited by PROFESSOR J. WERTHEIMER, F.I.C.
Fully Illustrated.

- HOW TO MAKE A DRESS. By J. A. E. Wood. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.
 CARPENTRY AND JOINERY. By F. C. Webber. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
 PRACTICAL MECHANICS. By Sidney H. Wells. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

PRACTICAL PHYSICS. By H. Stroud, D.Sc., M.A. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

MILLINERY, THEORETICAL AND PRACTICAL. By Clare Hill. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 2s.

PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY. Part I. By W. French, M.A. Crown 8vo. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.

PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY. Part II. By W. French, M.A., and T. H. Boardman, M.A. Crown 8vo. 1s. 6d.

TECHNICAL ARITHMETIC AND GEOMETRY. By C. T. Millis, M.I.M.E. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF TEXTILE DESIGN. By Aldred F. Barker. Demy 8vo.

7s. 6d.

BUILDERS' QUANTITIES. By H. C. Grubb. Crown 8vo. 4s. 6d.

*METAL WORK (REPOUSSE). By A. C. Horth. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Theology, Handbooks of

Edited by R. L. OTTLEY, D.D., Professor of Pastoral Theology at Oxford, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford.

The series is intended, in part, to furnish the clergy and teachers or students of Theology with trustworthy Text-books, adequately representing the present position of the questions dealt with; in part, to make accessible to the reading public an accurate and concise statement of facts and principles in all questions bearing on Theology and Religion.

THE XXXIX. ARTICLES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. Edited by E. C. S. Gibson, D.D. Third and Cheaper Edition in one Volume. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY OF RELIGION. By F. B. Jevons, M.A., Litt.D. Third Edition. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE INCARNATION. By R. L. Ottley, D.D. Second and Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo. 12s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY OF THE CREEDS. By A. E. Burn, B.D. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA. By Alfred Caldecott, D.D. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF EARLY CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE. By J. F. Bethune Baker, M.A. Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

Methuen's Universal Library

EDITED BY SIDNEY LEE. In Sixpenny Volumes.

MESSRS. METHUEN are preparing a new series of reprints containing both books of classical repute, which are accessible in various forms, and also some rarer books, of which no satisfactory edition at a moderate price is in existence. It is their ambition to place the best books of all nations, and particularly of the Anglo-Saxon race, within the reach of every reader. All the great masters of Poetry, Drama, Fiction, History, Biography, and Philosophy will be represented. Mr. Sidney Lee will be the General Editor of the Library, and he will contribute a Note to each book.

The characteristics of METHUEN'S UNIVERSAL LIBRARY are five:—

1. SOUNDNESS OF TEXT. A pure and unabridged text is the primary object of the series, and the books will be carefully reprinted under the direction of competent scholars from the best editions. In a series intended for popular use not less than for students, adherence to the old spelling would in many cases leave the matter unintelligible to ordinary readers, and, as the appeal of a classic is universal, the spelling has in general been modernised.

2. COMPLETENESS. Where it seems advisable, the complete works of such masters as Milton, Bacon, Ben Jonson and Sir Thomas Browne will be given. These will be issued in separate volumes, so that the reader who does not desire all the works of an author will have the opportunity of acquiring a single masterpiece.

3. CHEAPNESS. The books will be well printed on good paper at a price which on the whole is without parallel in the history of publishing. Each volume will contain from 100 to 350 pages, and will be issued in paper covers, Crown 8vo, at Sixpence net. In a few cases a long book will be issued as a Double Volume at One Shilling net.

4. CLEARNESS OF TYPE. The type will be a very legible one.

5. SIMPLICITY. There will be no editorial matter except a short biographical and bibliographical note by Mr. Sidney Lee at the beginning of each volume.

The volumes may also be obtained in cloth at One Shilling net, or in the case of a Double Volume at One and Sixpence net. Thus TOM JONES may be bought in a Double paper volume at One Shilling net, or in one cloth volume at 1s. 6d. net.

The Library will be issued at regular intervals after the publication of the first six books, all of which will be published together. Due notice will be given of succeeding issues. The orders of publication will be arranged to give as much variety of subject as possible, and the volume composing the complete works of an author will be issued at convenient intervals.

These are the early Books, all of which are in the Press.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. In 10 volumes.

VOL. I.—The Tempest; The Two Gentlemen of Verona; The Merry Wives of Windsor; Measure for Measure; The Comedy of Errors.

VOL. II.—Much Ado About Nothing; Love's Labour's Lost; A Midsummer Night's Dream; The Merchant of Venice; As You Like It.

VOL. III.—The Taming of the Shrew; All's Well that Ends Well; Twelfth Night; The Winter's Tale.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. By John Bunyan.

THE NOVELS OF JANE AUSTEN. In 5 volumes.

VOL. I.—Sense and Sensibility.

THE ENGLISH WORKS OF FRANCIS BACON, LORD VERULAM.

VOL. I.—Essays and Counsels and the New Atlantis.

THE POEMS AND PLAYS OF OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

ON THE Imitation of Christ. By Thomas à Kempis.

THE WORKS OF BEN JOHNSON. In about 12 volumes.

VOL. I.—The Case is Altered; Every Man in His Humour; Every Man out of His Humour.

THE PROSE WORKS OF JOHN MILTON.

VOL. I.—Eikonoklastes and The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

SELECT WORKS OF EDMUND BURKE.

VOL. I.—Reflections on the French Revolution.

VOL. II.—Speeches on America.

THE WORKS OF HENRY FIELDING.

VOL. I.—Tom Jones. (Double Volume.)

VOL. II.—Amelia. (Double Volume.)

THE POEMS OF THOMAS CHATTERTON. In 2 volumes.

VOL. I.—Miscellaneous Poems.

VOL. II.—The Rowley Poems.

THE MEDITATIONS OF MARCUS AURELIUS. Translated by R. Graves.

THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE. By Edward Gibbon.

In 7 volumes.

The Notes have been revised by J. B. Bury, Litt.D.

THE PLAYS OF CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE.

VOL. I.—Tamburlane the Great; The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus.

VOL. II.—The Jew of Malta; Edward the Second; The Massacre at Paris; The Tragedy of Dido.

THE NATURAL HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES OF SELBORNE. By Gilbert White.

THE COMPLETE ANGLER. In 2 volumes.

VOL. I.—By Izaak Walton.

VOL. II.—Part 2, by Cotton, and Part 3 by Venables.

THE POEMS OF PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY. In 4 volumes.

VOL. I.—Alastor; The Daemon of the World; The Revolt of Islam, etc.

THE WORKS OF SIR THOMAS BROWNE. In 6 volumes.

VOL. I.—Religio Medici and Urn Burial.

THE POEMS OF JOHN MILTON. In 2 volumes.

VOL. I.—Paradise Lost.

VOL. II.—Miscellaneous Poems and Paradise Regained.

HUMPHREY CLINKER. By T. G. Smollett.

SELECT WORKS OF SIR THOMAS MORE.

VOL. I.—Utopia and Poems.

THE ANALOGY OF RELIGION, NATURAL AND REVEALED. By Joseph Butler, D.D.

ON HUMAN UNDERSTANDING. By John Locke. In 3 volumes.

THE POEMS OF JOHN KEATS. In 2 volumes.

THE DIVINE COMEDY OF DANTE. The Italian Text edited by Paget Toynbee, M.A., D.Litt. (A Double Volume.)

Westminster Commentaries, The

General Editor, WALTER LOCK, D.D., Warden of Keble College, Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis in the University of Oxford.

The object of each commentary is primarily exegetical, to interpret the author's meaning to the present generation. The editors will not deal, except very subordinately, with questions of textual criticism or philology; but, taking the English text in the Revised Version as their basis, they will try to combine a hearty acceptance of critical principles with loyalty to the Catholic Faith.

THE BOOK OF GENESIS. Edited with Introduction and Notes by S. R. Driver, D.D. Third Edition Demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

THE BOOK OF JOB. Edited by E. C. S. Gibson, D.D. Second Edition. Demy 8vo. 6s.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. Edited by R. B. Rackham, M.A. Demy 8vo. Second and Cheaper Edition. 10s. 6d.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS. Edited by H. L. Goudge, M.A. Demy 8vo. 6s.

THE EPISTLE OF ST. JAMES. Edited with Introduction and Notes by R. J. Knowling, M.A. Demy 8vo. 6s.

PART II.—FICTION

Marie Corelli's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS. Twenty-Fifth Edition.

VENDETTA. Twenty-First Edition.

THELMA. Thirty-First Edition.

ARDATH: THE STORY OF A DEAD SELF. Fifteenth Edition.

THE SOUL OF LILITH. Twelfth Edition.

WORMWOOD. Fourteenth Edition.

BARABBAS: A DREAM OF THE WORLD'S TRAGEDY. Thirty-Ninth Edition.

'The tender reverence of the treatment and the imaginative beauty of the writing have reconciled us to the daring of the conception. This "Dream of the World's Tragedy" is a lofty and not inadequate paraphrase of the supreme climax of the inspired narrative.'—Dublin Review.

THE SORROWS OF SATAN. Forty-Eighth Edition.

'A very powerful piece of work. . . . The conception is magnificent, and is likely to win an abiding place within the memory of man. . . . The author has immense command of language, and a limitless audacity. . . . This interesting and remarkable romance will live long after much of the ephemeral literature of the day is forgotten. . . . A literary phenomenon . . . novel, and even sublime.'—W. T. STEAD in the Review of Reviews.

THE MASTER CHRISTIAN. [165th Thousand.]

'It cannot be denied that "The Master Christian" is a powerful book; that it is one likely to raise uncomfortable questions in all but the most self-satisfied readers, and that it strikes at the root of the failure of the Churches—the decay of faith—in a manner which shows the inevitable disaster heaping up. . . . The good Cardinal Bonpré is a beautiful figure, fit to stand beside the good Bishop in "Les Misérables." It is a book with a serious purpose expressed with absolute unconventionality and passion. . . . And this is to say it is a book worth reading.'—Examiner.

TEMPORAL POWER: A STUDY IN SUPREMACY.

[150th Thousand.]

'It is impossible to read such a work as "Temporal Power" without becoming convinced that the story is intended to convey certain criticisms on the ways of the world and certain suggestions for the betterment of humanity. . . . If the chief intention of the book was to hold the mirror up to shams, injustice, dishonesty, cruelty, and neglect of conscience, nothing but praise can be given to that intention.'—Morning Post.

GOD'S GOOD MAN: A SIMPLE LOVE STORY. Sixth Edition.

Anthony Hope's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

THE GOD IN THE CAR. Tenth Edition.

'A very remarkable book, deserving of critical analysis impossible within our limit; brilliant, but not superficial; well considered, but not elaborated; constructed with the proverbial art that conceals, but yet allows itself to be enjoyed by readers to whom fine literary method is a keen pleasure.'—The World.

A CHANGE OF AIR. Sixth Edition.

'A graceful, vivacious comedy, true to human nature. The characters are traced with a masterly hand.'—Times.

A MAN OF MARK. Fifth Edition.

'Of all Mr. Hope's books, "A Man of Mark" is the one which best compares with The Prisoner of Zenda.'—National Observer.

THE CHRONICLES OF COUNT ANTONIO. Fifth Edition.

'It is a perfectly enchanting story of love and chivalry, and pure romance. The Count is the most constant, desperate, and modest and tender of lovers, a peerless gentleman, an intrepid fighter, a faithful friend, and a magnanimous foe.'—Guardian.

PHROSO. Illustrated by H. R. MILLAR. Sixth Edition.

'The tale is thoroughly fresh, quick with vitality, stirring the blood.'—St. James's Gazette.

SIMON DALE. Illustrated. Sixth Edition.

'There is searching analysis of human nature, with a most ingeniously constructed plot. Mr. Hope has drawn the contrasts of his women with marvellous subtlety and delicacy.'—Times.

THE KING'S MIRROR. Fourth Edition.

'In elegance, delicacy, and tact it ranks with the best of his novels, while in the wide range of its portraiture and the subtlety of its analysis it surpasses all his earlier ventures.'—Spectator.

QUISANTE. Fourth Edition.

'The book is notable for a very high literary quality, and an impress of power and mastery on every page.'—Daily Chronicle.

THE DOLLY DIALOGUES.

W. W. Jacobs' Novels

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d. each.

MANY CARGOES. Twenty-Seventh Edition.

SEA URCHINS. Eleventh Edition.

A MASTER OF CRAFT. Illustrated. Sixth Edition.

'Can be unreservedly recommended to all who have not lost their appetite for wholesome laughter.'—Spectator.

'The best humorous book published for many a day.'—Black and White.

LIGHT FREIGHTS. Illustrated. Fourth Edition.

'His wit and humour are perfectly irresistible. Mr. Jacobs writes of skippers, and mates, and seamen, and his crew are the jolliest lot that ever sailed.'—Daily News.

'Laughter in every page.'—Daily Mail.

Lucas Malet's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

COLONEL ENDERBY'S WIFE. Third Edition.

A COUNSEL OF PERFECTION. New Edition.

LITTLE PETER. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.

THE WAGES OF SIN. Fourteenth Edition.

THE CARISSIMA. Fourth Edition.

THE GATELESS BARRIER. Fourth Edition.

'In "The Gateless Barrier" it is at once evident that, whilst Lucas Malet has preserved her birthright of originality, the artistry, the actual writing, is above even the high level of the books that were born before.'—Westminster Gazette.

THE HISTORY OF SIR RICHARD CALMADY. Seventh Edition. A Limited Edition in Two Volumes. Crown 8vo. 12s.

'A picture finely and amply conceived. In the strength and insight in which the story has been conceived, in the wealth of fancy and reflection bestowed upon its execution, and in the moving sincerity of its pathos throughout, "Sir Richard Calmady" must rank as the great novel of a great writer.'—Literature.

'The ripest fruit of Lucas Malet's genius. A picture of maternal love by turns tender and terrible.'—Spectator.

'A remarkably fine book, with a noble motive and a sound conclusion.'—Pilot.

Gilbert Parker's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

PIERRE AND HIS PEOPLE. Fifth Edition.

'Stories happily conceived and finely executed. There is strength and genius in Mr. Parker's style.'—Daily Telegraph.

MRS. FALCHION. Fifth Edition.

'A splendid study of character.'—Athenaeum.

THE TRANSLATION OF A SAVAGE. Second Edition.

THE TRAIL OF THE SWORD. Illustrated. Eighth Edition.

'A rousing and dramatic tale. A book like this is a joy inexpressible.'—Daily Chronicle.

WHEN VALMOND CAME TO PONTIAC: The Story of a Lost Napoleon. Fifth Edition.

'Here we find romance—real, breathing, living romance. The character of Valmond is drawn unerringly.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN ADVENTURER OF THE NORTH: The Last Adventures of 'Pretty Pierre.' Third Edition.

'The present book is full of fine and moving stories of the great North.'—Glasgow Herald.

THE SEATS OF THE MIGHTY. Illustrated. Thirteenth Edition.

'Mr. Parker has produced a really fine historical novel.'—Athenaeum.

'A great book.'—Black and White.

THE BATTLE OF THE STRONG: a Romance of Two Kingdoms. Illustrated. Fourth Edition.

'Nothing more vigorous or more human has come from Mr. Gilbert Parker than this novel.'—Literature.

THE POMP OF THE LAVILETTES. Second Edition. 3s. 6d.

'Unforced pathos, and a deeper knowledge of human nature than he has displayed before.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

Arthur Morrison's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

TALES OF MEAN STREETS. Sixth Edition.

'A great book. The author's method is amazingly effective, and produces a thrilling sense of reality. The writer lays upon us a master hand. The book is simply appalling and irresistible in its interest. It is humorous also; without humour it would not make the mark it is certain to make.'—World.

A CHILD OF THE JAGO. Fourth Edition.

'The book is masterpiece.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

TO LONDON TOWN. Second Edition.

'This is the new Mr. Arthur Morrison, gracious and tender, sympathetic and human.'—Daily Telegraph.

CUNNING MURRELL.

'Admirable. . . . Delightful humorous relief . . . a most artistic and satisfactory achievement.'—Spectator.

THE HOLE IN THE WALL. Third Edition.

'A masterpiece of artistic realism. It has a finality of touch that only a master may command.'—Daily Chronicle.

'An absolute masterpiece, which any novelist might be proud to claim.'—Graphic.

'"The Hole in the Wall" is a masterly piece of work. His characters are drawn with amazing skill. Extraordinary power.'—Daily Telegraph.

Eden Phillpotts' Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

LYING PROPHETS.

CHILDREN OF THE MIST. Fifth Edition.

THE HUMAN BOY. With a Frontispiece. Fourth Edition.

'Mr. Phillpotts knows exactly what school-boys do, and can lay bare their inmost thoughts; likewise he shows an all-pervading sense of humour.'—Academy.

SONS OF THE MORNING. Second Edition.

'A book of strange power and fascination.'—Morning Post.

THE STRIKING HOURS. Second Edition.

'Tragedy and comedy, pathos and humour, are blended to a nicety in this volume.'—World.

'The whole book is redolent of a fresher and ampler air than breathes in the circumscribed life of great towns.'—Spectator.

THE RIVER. Third Edition.

'"The River" places Mr. Phillpotts in the front rank of living novelists.'—Punch.

'Since "Lorna Doone" we have had nothing so picturesque as this new romance.'—Birmingham Gazette.

'Mr. Phillpotts's new book is a masterpiece which brings him indisputably into the front rank of English novelists.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

'This great romance of the River Dart. The finest book Mr. Eden Phillpotts has written.'—Morning Post.

THE AMERICAN PRISONER. Third Edition.

THE SECRET WOMAN.

S. Baring-Gould's Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

ARMINELL. Fifth Edition.	THE PENNYCOMEQUICKS. Third Edition.
URITH. Fifth Edition.	GUAVAS THE TINNER. Illustrated. Second Edition.
IN THE ROAR OF THE SEA. Seventh Edition.	BLADYS. Illustrated. Second Edition.
CHEAP JACK ZITA. Fourth Edition.	DOMITIA. Illustrated. Second Edition.
MRS. CURGENVEN OF CURGENVEN. Illustrated.	PABO THE PRIEST.
MARGERY OF QUETHER. Third Edition.	WINIFRED. Illustrated. Second Edition.
THE QUEEN OF LOVE. Fifth Edition.	THE FROBISHERS.
JACQUETTA. Third Edition.	ROYAL GEORGIE. Illustrated.
KITTY ALONE. Fifth Edition.	MISS QUILLET. Illustrated.
NOÉMI. Illustrated. Fourth Edition.	LITTLE TU'PENNY. A New Edition. 6d.
THE BROOM-SQUIRE. Illustrated. Fourth Edition.	CHRIS OF ALL SORTS.
DARTMOOR IDYLLS.	IN DEWISLAND. Second Edition.

Robert Barr's Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

IN THE MIDST OF ALARMS. Third Edition.	'A book which has abundantly satisfied us by its capital humour.'— Daily Chronicle.
THE MUTABLE MANY. Second Edition.	'There is much insight in it, and much excellent humour.'— Daily Chronicle.
THE COUNTESS TEKLA. Third Edition.	'Of these mediaeval romances, which are now gaining ground, "The Countess Tekla" is the very best we have seen.'— Pall Mall Gazette.
THE LADY ELECTRA. Second Edition.
*THE TEMPESTUOUS PETTICOAT.

E. Maria Albanesi's Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

SUSANNAH AND ONE OTHER. Fourth Edition.
THE BLUNDER OF AN INNOCENT. Second Edition.
CAPRICIOUS CAROLINE. Second Edition.
LOVE AND LOUISA. Second Edition.
PETER, A PARASITE.

B. M. Croker's Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

ANGEL. Fourth Edition.	A STATE SECRET. Third Edition.
PEGGY OF THE BARTONS. Sixth Edit.	JOHANNA. Second Edition.
A VOLUME OF STORIES.	THE HAPPY VALLEY. Second Edition.

J. H. Findlater's Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

THE GREEN GRAVES OF BALGOWRIE. Fifth Edition.
--

Mary Findlater's Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s.

A NARROW WAY. Third Edition.	THE ROSE OF JOY. Second Edition.
-------------------------------------	---

Robert Hichens' Novels
Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

THE PROPHET OF BERKELEY SQUARE. Second Edition.
TONGUES OF CONSCIENCE. Second Edition.
FELIX. Fourth Edition.
THE WOMAN WITH THE FAN. Fifth Edition.
BYEWAYS. 3s. 6d.
THE GARDEN OF ALLAH. Sixth Edition.

Henry James's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

THE SOFT SIDE. Second Edition.
THE BETTER SORT.THE AMBASSADORS. Second Edition.
THE GOLDEN BOWL.

Mary E. Mann's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

OLIVIA'S SUMMER. Second Edition.
A LOST ESTATE. A New Edition.
THE PARISH OF HILBY. A New Edition.
*THE PARISH NURSE.
GRAN'MA'S JANE.
MRS. PETER HOWARD.A WINTER'S TALE. A New Edition.
ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS. A New Edition.
THERE WAS ONCE A PRINCE. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
WHEN ARNOLD COMES HOME. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

W. Pett Ridge's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

LOST PROPERTY. Second Edition.
ERB. Second Edition.
A SON OF THE STATE. 3s. 6d.A BREAKER OF LAWS. 3s. 6d.
MRS. GALER'S BUSINESS.
SECRETARY TO BAYNE, M.P. 3s. 6d.

Adeline Sergeant's Novels

Crown 8vo. 6s. each.

THE MASTER OF BEECHWOOD.
BARBARA'S MONEY. Second Edition.
ANTHEA'S WAY.
THE YELLOW DIAMOND. Second Edition.
UNDER SUSPICION.THE LOVE THAT OVERCAME.
THE ENTHUSIAST.
ACCUSED AND ACCUSER. Second Edition.
THE PROGRESS OF RACHEL.
THE MYSTERY OF THE MOAT.

Albanesi (E. Maria). See page 35.

Anstey (F.), Author of 'Vice Versâ.' A BAYARD FROM BENGAL. Illustrated by BERNARD PARTRIDGE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.Bacheller (Irving), Author of 'Eben Holden.' DARREL OF THE BLESSED ISLES. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.Bagot (Richard). A ROMAN MYSTERY. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Balfour (Andrew). See Shilling Novels.

Baring-Gould (S.). See page 35 and Shilling Novels.

Barlow (Jane). THE LAND OF THE SHAMROCK. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Shilling Novels.

Barr (Robert). See page 35 and Shilling Novels.

Begbie (Harold). THE ADVENTURES OF SIR JOHN SPARROW. Crown 8vo. 6s. Belloc (Hilaire). EMMANUEL BURDEN, MERCHANT. With 36 Illustrations by G. K. CHESTERTON. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Benson (E. F.). See Shilling Novels.

Benson (Margaret). SUBJECT TO VANITY. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

Besant (Sir Walter). See Shilling Novels.

Bowles (C. Stewart). A STRETCH OFF THE LAND. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Bullock (Shan. F.). THE SQUIREEN. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE RED LEAGUERS. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Burton (J. Bloundelle). THE YEAR ONE: A Page of the French Revolution. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE FATE OF VALSEC. Crown 8vo. 6s.

A BRANDED NAME. Crown 8vo. 6s.

See also Shilling Novels.

Capes (Bernard), Author of 'The Lake of Wine.' THE EXTRAORDINARY CONFESSIONS OF DIANA PLEASE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Chesney (Weatherby). THE BAPTIST RING. Crown 8vo. 6s.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE GREAT EMERALD. Crown 8vo. 6s.

- THE MYSTERY OF A BUNGALOW. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Clifford (Hugh). A FREE LANCE OF TO-DAY. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Clifford (Mrs. W. K.). See also Shilling Novels and Books for Boys and Girls.
- Cobb (Thomas). A CHANGE OF FACE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Cobban (J. Maclarens). See Shilling Novels.
- Corelli (Marie). See page 32.
- Cotes (Mrs. Everard). See Sara Jeannette Duncan.
- Cotterell (Constance). THE VIRGIN AND THE SCALES. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Crane (Stephen) and Barr (Robert). THE O'Ruddy. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Crockett (S. R.), Author of 'The Raiders,' etc. LOCHINVAR. Illustrated. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE STANDARD BEARER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Croker (B. M.). See page 35.
- Dawson (A. J.). DANIEL WHYTE. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Doyle (A. Conan), Author of 'Sherlock Holmes,' 'The White Company,' etc. ROUND THE RED LAMP. Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Duncan (Sara Jeannette) (Mrs. Everard Cotes). THOSE DELIGHTFUL AMERICANS. Illustrated. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE POOL IN THE DESERT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A VOYAGE OF CONSOLATION. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Findlater (J. H.). See page 35 and Shilling Novels.
- Findlater (Mary). See page 35.
- Fitzpatrick (K.) THE WEANS AT ROWALLAN. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Fitzstephen (Gerald). MORE KIN THAN KIND. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Fletcher (J. S.). LUCIAN THE DREAMER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- DAVID MARCH. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Francis (M. E.). See Shilling Novels.
- Fraser (Mrs. Hugh), Author of 'The Stolen Emperor.' THE SLAKING OF THE SWORD. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Gallon (Tom), Author of 'Kiddy.' RICKERBY'S FOLLY. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Gerard (Dorothea), Author of 'Lady Baby.' THE CONQUEST OF LONDON. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- HOLY MATRIMONY. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- MADE OF MONEY. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE BRIDGE OF LIFE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Gerard (Emily). THE HERONS' TOWER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Gissing (George), Author of 'Demos,' 'In the Year of Jubilee,' etc. THE TOWN TRAVELLER. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE CROWN OF LIFE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Glanville (Ernest). THE INCA'S TREASURE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Gleig (Charles). BUNTER'S CRUISE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Goss (C. F.). See Shilling Novels.
- Herbertson (Agnes G.). PATIENCE DEAN. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Hichens (Robert). See page 35.
- Hobbes (John Oliver), Author of 'Robert Orange.' THE SERIOUS WOOING. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Hope (Anthony). See page 32.
- Hough (Emerson). THE MISSISSIPPI BUBBLE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Hyne (C. J. Cutcliffe), Author of 'Captain Kettle.' MR. HORROCKS, PURSER. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Jacobs (W. W.). See page 33.
- James (Henry). See page 36.
- Janson (Gustaf). ABRAHAM'S SACRIFICE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Keays (H. A. Mitchell). HE THAT EATHETH BREAD WITH ME. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Lawless (Hon. Emily). See Shilling Novels.
- Lawson (Harry), Author of 'When the Billy Boils.' CHILDREN OF THE BUSH. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Levett-Yeats (S.). ORRAIN. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Linden (Annie). A WOMAN OF SENTIMENT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Linton (E. Lynn). THE TRUE HISTORY OF JOSHUA DAVIDSON, Christian and Communist. Twelfth Edition. Medium 8vo. 6d.
- Long (J. Luther), Co-Author of 'The Darling of the Gods.' MADAME BUTTERFLY. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- SIXTY JANE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Lyall (Edna). DERRICK VAUGHAN, NOVELIST. 42nd Thousand. Cr. 8vo. 3s. 6d.

- M'Carthy (Justin H.), Author of 'If I were King.' THE LADY OF LOYALTY HOUSE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE DRYAD. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Mackie (Pauline Bradford). THE VOICE IN THE DESERT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Macnaughtan (S.), THE FORTUNE OF CHRISTINA MACNAB. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Malet (Lucas). See page 33.
- Mann (Mrs. M. E.). See page 36.
- Marriott (Charles), Author of 'The Column.' GENEVRA. Second Edition. Cr. 8vo. 6s.
- Marsh (Richard). THE TWICKENHAM PEERAGE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A METAMORPHOSIS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- GARNERED. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- A DUEL. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Mason (A. E. W.), Author of 'The Courtship of Morrice Buckler,' 'Miranda of the Balcony,' etc. CLEMENTINA. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. Second Edition. 6s.
- Mathers (Helen), Author of 'Comin' thro' the Rye.' HONEY. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- GRIFF OF GRIFFITHSCOURT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Meade (L. T.). DRIFT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- RESURGAM. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Meredith (Ellis). HEART OF MY HEART. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- 'Miss Molly' (The Author of). THE GREAT RECONCILER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Mitford (Bertram). THE SIGN OF THE SPIDER. Illustrated. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- IN THE WHIRL OF THE RISING. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE RED DERELICT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Montresor (F. F.), Author of 'Into the Highways and Hedges.' THE ALIEN. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Morrison (Arthur). See page 34.
- Nesbit (E.), (Mrs. E. Bland). THE RED HOUSE. Illustrated. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE LITERARY SENSE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Norris (W. E.). THE CREDIT OF THE COUNTY. Illustrated. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE EMBARRASSING ORPHAN. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- NIGEL'S VOCATION. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- LORD LEONARD THE LUCKLESS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- BARHAM OF BELTANA. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Oliphant (Mrs.). See Shilling Novels.
- Olivant (Alfred). OWD BOB, THE GREY DOG OF KENMUIR. Seventh Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Oppenheim (E. Phillips). MASTER OF MEN. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Oxenham (John), Author of 'Barbe of Grand Bayou.' A WEAVER OF WEBS Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE GATE OF THE DESERT. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Pain (Barry). THREE FANTASIES. Crown 8vo. 1s.
- LINDLEY KAYS. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Parker (Gilbert). See page 23.
- Pemberton (Max). THE FOOTSTEPS OF A THRONE. Illustrated. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- I CROWN THEE KING. With Illustrations by Frank Dadd and A. Forrester. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Penny (Mrs. F. E.). See Shilling Novels.
- Phillpotts (Eden). See page 34, and Shilling Novels.
- Pickthal (Marmaduke). SAID THE FISHERMAN. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- *BRENDLE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- *Pryce (Richard). WINIFRED MOUNT. A New Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- *Q. Author of 'Dead Man's Rock.' THE WHITE WOLF. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Queux (W. le). THE HUNCHBACK OF WESTMINSTER. Third Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE CLOSED BOOK. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE VALLEY OF THE SHADOW. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Rhys (Grace). THE WOOING OF SHEILA. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE PRINCE OF LISNOVER. Crown 8vo. 6s.

- Rhys (Grace) and Another. THE DIVERTED VILLAGE. With Illustrations by DOROTHY GWYN JEFFREYS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Ridge (W. Pett). See page 36.
- Ritchie (Mrs. David G.). THE TRUTHFUL LIAR. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Roberts (C. G. D.). THE HEART OF THE ANCIENT WOOD. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- *Robertson (Frances Forbes). THE TAMING OF THE BRUTE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Russell (W. Clark). MY DANISH SWEETHEART. Illustrated. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- ABANDONED. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- HIS ISLAND PRINCESS. Illustrated. Crown 6vo. 6s.
- Sergeant (Adeline). See page 36.
- Shannon (W. F.). THE MESS DECK. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- JIM TWELVES. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- Sonnichsen (Albert). DEEP SEA VAGABONDS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Stringer (Arthur). THE SILVER POPPY. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Sutherland (Duchess of). See Shilling Novels.
- Swan (Annie). See Shilling Novels.
- Tanqueray (Mrs. B. M.). THE ROYAL QUAKER. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Thompson (Vance). SPINNERS OF LIFE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Waineman (Paul). BY A FINNISH LAKE. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE SONG OF THE FOREST. Crown 8vo. 6s. See also Shilling Novels.
- Watson (H. B. Marriott). ALARUMS AND EXCURSIONS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- CAPTAIN FORTUNE. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Wells (H. G.) THE SEA LADY. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Weyman (Stanley), Author of 'A Gentleman of France.' UNDER THE RED ROBE. With Illustrations by R. C. WOODVILLE. Eighteenth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- White (Stewart E.). Author of 'The Blazed Trail.' CONJUROR'S HOUSE. A Romance of the Free Trail. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- White (Percy). THE SYSTEM. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Williamson (Mrs. C. N.), Author of 'The Barnstormers.' PAPA. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE ADVENTURE OF PRINCESS SYLVIA. Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- THE WOMAN WHO DARED. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE SEA COULD TELL. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE CASTLE OF THE SHADOWS. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- Williamson (C. N. and A. M.). THE LIGHTNING CONDUCTOR: Being the Romance of a Motor Car. Illustrated. Ninth Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.
- THE PRINCESS PASSES. Illustrated. Second Edition. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Methuen's Shilling Novels

Cloth, 1s. net.

ENCOURAGED by the great and steady sale of their Sixpenny Novels, Messrs. Methuen have determined to issue a new series of fiction at a low price under the title of 'METHUEN'S SHILLING NOVELS.' These books are well printed and well bound in cloth, and the excellence of their quality may be gauged from the names of those authors who contribute the early volumes of the series.

* Messrs. Methuen would point out that the books are as good and as long as a six shilling novel, that they are bound in cloth and not in paper, and that their price is One Shilling net. They feel sure that the public will appreciate such good and cheap literature, and the books can be seen at all good booksellers.

The first volumes are—

- Baring-Gould (S.). MRS. CURGENVEN OF CURGENVEN.
- Barlow (Jane), Author of 'Irish Idylls.' FROM THE EAST UNTO THE WEST.
- Desant (Sir Walter). A FIVE-YEARS' TRYST.
- Waineman (Paul). A HEROINE FROM FINLAND.
- Lawless (Hon. Emily). MAELCHO.
- Swan (Annie). LOVE GROWN COLD.
- Francis (M. E.). MISS ERIN.
- Sutherland (Duchess of). ONE HOUR AND THE NEXT.
- Burton (J. Bloundelle). ACROSS THE SALT SEAS.
- Oliphan (Mrs.). THE PRODIGALS.
- Balfour (Andrew). VENGEANCE IS MINE.

- Barr (Robert). Author of 'The Countess Tekla.' THE VICTORS.
 Penny (Mrs. F. A.). A MIXED MARRIAGE.
 Hamilton (Lord Ernest). MARY HAMILTON.
 Glanville (Ernest). THE LOST REGIMENT.
 Benson (E. F.). Author of 'Dodo.' THE CAPSINA.
 Goss (C. F.). THE REDEMPTION OF DAVID CORSON.
 Findlater (J. H.). Author of 'The Green Graves of Balgowie.' A DAUGHTER OF STRIFE.
 Cobban, (J. M.). THE KING OF ANDAMAN.
 Clifford (Mrs. W. K.). A WOMAN ALONE.
 Phillipps (Eden). FANCY FREE.

Boys and Girls, Books for

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.

- THE GETTING WELL OF DOROTHY. By Mrs. W. K. Clifford. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. Second Edition.
 THE ICELANDER'S SWORD. By S. Baring-Gould.
 ONLY A GUARD-ROOM DOG. By Edith E. Cuthell.
 THE DOCTOR OF THE JULIET. By Harry Collingwood.

- MASTER ROCKAFELLAR'S VOYAGE. By W. Clark Russell.
 THE SECRET OF MADAME DE MONLUC. By the Author of "M'dle. Mori."
 SYD BELTON: Or, the Boy who would not go to Sea. By G. Manville Fenn.
 THE RED GRANGE. By Mrs. Molesworth.
 A GIRL OF THE PEOPLE. By L. T. Meade.
 HESPY GIPSY. By L. T. Meade. 2s. 6d.
 THE HONOURABLE MISS. By L. T. Meade.

Dumas, The Novels of Alexandre

Price 6d. Double Volume, 1s.

- THE THREE MUSKETEERS. With a long Introduction by Andrew Lang. Double volume.
 THE PRINCE OF THIEVES. Second Edition.
 ROBIN HOOD. A Sequel to the above.
 THE CORSICAN BROTHERS.
 GEORGES.
 CROP-EARED JACQUOT; JANE; Etc.
 TWENTY YEARS AFTER. Double volume.
 AMAURY.
 THE CASTLE OF EPPSTEIN.
 THE SNOWBALL, and SULTANETTA.
 CECILE; OR, THE WEDDING GOWN.
 ACTÉ.
 THE BLACK TULIP.
 THE VICOMTE DE BRAGELONNE.
 Part i. Louis de la Vallière. Double Volume.
 Part ii. The Man in the Iron Mask. Double Volume.
 THE CONVICT'S SON.
 THE WOLF-LEADER.
 NANON; OR, THE WOMEN'S WAR. Double volume.
 PAULINE; MURAT; AND PASCAL BRUNO.
 THE ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN PAMPHILE.
 FERNANDE.
 GABRIEL LAMBERT.
 THE REMINISCENCES OF ANTONY.
 CATHERINE BLUM.
 THE CHEVALIER D'HARMENTAL.
 SYLVANDIRE.
 THE FENCING MASTER.
 *CONSCIENCE.
 *THE REGENT'S DAUGHTER. A Sequel to Chevalier d'Harmental.

Illustrated Edition.

- THE THREE MUSKETEERS. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams. 2s. 6d.
 THE PRINCE OF THIEVES. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams. 2s.
 ROBIN HOOD THE OUTLAW. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams. 2s.
 THE CORSICAN BROTHERS. Illustrated in Colour by A. M. M'Lellan. 1s. 6d.
 FERNANDE. Illustrated in Colour by Munro Orr.
 THE BLACK TULIP. Illustrated in Colour by A. Orr.
 GEORGES. Illustrated in Colour by Munro Orr.
 TWENTY YEARS AFTER. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams. 3s.
 AMAURY. Illustrated in Colour by Gordon Browne. 2s.
 THE SNOWBALL, and SULTANETTA. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams. 2s.
 *THE VICOMTE DE BRAGELONNE. Part i. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams.
 *CROP-EARED JACQUOT; JANE; Etc. Illustrated in Colour by Gordon Browne.
 *THE CASTLE OF EPPSTEIN. Illustrated in Colour by Stewart Orr.
 *ACTÉ. Illustrated in Colour by Gordon Browne.
 *CECILE; OR, THE WEDDING GOWN. Illustrated in Colour by D. Murray Smith.
 *THE ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN PAMPHILE. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams.
 *THE WOLF-LEADER. Illustrated in Colour by Frank Adams. 1s. 6d.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY
Los Angeles

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY
Los Angeles

This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

RECD LD-URL

RECD LD-URL

AUG 26 1985

RECD LD-URL MAR 17 1987

RENDLAI WSPR20 1987

MAR 17 1987

RECD LD-URL MAR 17 1987

MAR 17 1987

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
AT LOS ANGELES
LIBRARY

3 1158 00410 5564

11A

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

AA 000 390 034 7

